SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

THE grand political drama in the Punjab is still advancing slowly to its final catastrophe. The action, or catastasis,the term "plot" would be ambiguous,-is pretty well developed, and we expect soon to see whether the chief character, Moolraj, will fall, as he has pledged himself to do, with heroic dignity. He is reported to have declared his conviction that, if he dies bravely on the field, our Government will protect his family; whereas pusillanimity on his part will disgrace himself and ruin them.

We shall detail, in the first place, the incidents which have occurred before Mooltan since the last advices: secondly, the movements of the grand army under Lord Gough; and lastly, the positions and proceedings of the several detached bodies of mutinous Sikh troops, who have yet manifested no indications of any combined plan.

The last accounts from before Mooltan stated that the enemy had begun to establish batteries within range of our camp, on the Mooltan side of a deep nullah, about 20 feet broad, which fronted it. One of these batteries, of twelve guns, kept up a heavy fire upon Edwardes's camp, near the Sooruj-khoond, and on our side of the same nullah, whch takes a bend round, so that Cortlandt's batteries on our side of the nullah were pointed nearly at right angles with those of the enemy on the Mooltan side. The fire was so annoying, that General Whish ordered a battery to be constructed, a mile in front of our camp, of two 18-pounders and mortars, which was completed on the 4th November, and commanded the flank of the enemy's advanced battery. Meanwhile, sharp skirmishing had continued between our troops and parties of the Mooltanis. On the morning of the 6th, a number of the latter appearing in front of our advanced battery, a company of the 72nd N.I., on duty in the trench, drove them off, and followed them to the nullah, supported by two companies of H.M.'s 32nd, and attempted to storm the opposite bank. It appears that a large body of the enemy here, pretending to be Bhawulporeans (our allies), got close to our men, upon whom they fired, our party retreating with the loss of 22 killed, and about the same number wounded, Captain Maitland, of the 72nd N.I. being severely hurt.

The operations against the enemy "not having," as he said, "had the desired effect," General Whish determined to attack their position, and on the evening of the 6th a force, consisting of two brigades of infantry, 1,400 men each, and 600 cavalry, was ordered to be in readiness an hour before daylight. One of the brigades, composed of six companies of H.M.'s 10th foot, eight of the 8th N.I., and eight of the 52nd N.I., was under Lieut.-Col. Franks, H.M.'s 10th; the other, consisting of six companies of H.M.'s 32nd foot, and eight companies each from the 48th and 51st N.I., was under Lieut.-Col. Brooke, H.M.'s 32nd. Three squadrons of cavalry, from the 11th light cavalry, and the 7th and 11th irregular cavalry, and a troop of the 3rd brigade of horse artillery, under Brigadier Salter, accompanied the force, which was commanded by Brigadier Markham. The intention was to surprise the enemy by moving out to the eastward of the nullah, and making a circuit, taking the enemy's position in flank, Major Edwardes's force making a corresponding movement on the westward, down Wollee Maho med's Canal. An untoward event caused a change of the general's plans.

In order to leave our troops at liberty for the flank movement and to protect the camp, the troops in the advanced battery were relieved in the night of the 6th by the Kuttermukhee regiment of Cortlandt's force, and 1,000 Bhawulporeans, under Lieut. Pollock. Six companies of Cortlandt's regiment,-in fact, all the Poorbeeas (Hindustanis) in the corps,—went over, in small detachments, from the battery to the enemy, who came shouting to the rest of the men to follow their example. This desertion, and a belief that more of Cortlandt's troops were wavering, coupled with the news which had been that day received of the defection of the Sikh troops at Peshawur, had a disheartening influence upon the whole British force. The night operation was consequently countermanded, and the troops were ordered to be ready at 10 o'clock; but soon after daybreak heavy firing was heard, and news arrived that Major Edwardes's camp had been attacked in force by the enemy, who had outflanked his batteries, and were on the point of taking those of Cortlandt and Emam-ood-deen. The troops under Brigadier Markham were immediately on their march, and, passing through Edwardes's camp, crossed the great nullah, near the Sooruj-khoond. Meanwhile, Cortlandt's brigade (those that remained stanch), supported by Bhawul Khan's men, after a long hand-to-hand fight, had, by a most gallant and desperate charge, driven the enemy off, killing an immense number, not, however, without suffering severely in turn.

At this period, the British columns, having had a long detour to make, arrived in rear of the enemy's position, where they formed. The Mooltanis perceived their approach a mile off, and commenced cannonading; but our troops went right in at them, cavalry and infantry, natives and Europeans, emulating each other. The cavalry swept along the entire front; the infantry then charged in line, and, from the rapidity of their advance, the showers of the enemy's grape whistled harmlessly over their heads. Battery after battery was taken with trifling loss, and all the Sikh guns fell into our possession. The enemy threw themselves into the bottom of the nullah, 20 feet deep (those who ventured on the banks were cut up by the Bhawulporeans), and fled to Mooltan. suffered severely, having lost from 800 to 1,000 men. Amongst the slain was the leader of the men who deserted from Cortlandt's regiment; and Hurree Singh, the Sikh commander, who deserted Mr. Vans Agnew, was taken mortally wounded. Our loss was two (Europeans) killed and about eighteen of all arms wounded; no officer being either killed or wounded. Great praise is bestowed upon Brigadier Markham for his excellent dispositions and arrangements, to which is attributed the small loss sustained in this brilliant affair. "The excellence of our tactics was only surpassed by the conduct of our troops."

It is said that Moolraj was in a temple at Mooltan, during this action, celebrating the funeral rites of his nephew, who had fallen on the 6th at the advanced post, and when he heard that his troops were rushing within the walls of the fortress in dismay, he upbraided the sirdars: "You promised me," he said, "that the whole camp should be moved to Soojabad; go, and break your heads!"

From this period to the date of the latest accounts from Mooltan (20th November) nothing occurred, and the camp relapsed into its former tranquillity. Moolraj had received a reinforcement of 2,000 men, under Mohur Singh, from Bunnoo, and his force is now said to amount to 10,000 or 12,000. He was busy strengthening his works, which denotes a determination to defend them to the last. It is said that General Whish was much disappointed at the non-arrival of the Bombay troops, and that he had written to Scinde, urging their march.

Nearly the whole of the field force from Bombay had assembled at Rores on the 22nd November, and the first brigade, 7,000 strong, under Brigadier Dundas, is said to have commenced their upward march on the 21st, and the whole would be on their way by the 26th. They could scarcely arrive at Mooltan before the middle or 20th of December. None of the officers of the Roree force likely to supersede those at Mooltan have been permitted to go on with it. A detachment consisting of the 3rd N.I., Turnbull's battery, and 500 of Jacob's horse, had got as far as Ooch, but when within a week's march of Mooltan they were ordered to halt.

We now turn to the movements of the grand army in the Rechna dooab. Our last Summary stated that the brigades of Godby and Eckford, and the cavalry under Brigadier Cureton, had crossed the Ravec to its right bank. This body of troops numbered 7,000 men. On the 3rd November they were put in motion for Wuzeerabad, Eckford's brigade remaining to guard the bridge. They advanced without interruption (the villages being mostly deserted) to Dadun-Singh-ka-killah, midway between Wuzeerabad and Ramnuggur, 16 miles from each, on the left bank of the Chenab, where they halted. On their march to Goojranwallah, they mistook a body of 2,000 of Lieut. Nicholson's troops, on their way to Ramnuggur, for insurgents, and gave On the 16th they were joined by Brigadier-General Campbell, with the 36th and 46th regiments N.I., from Lahore, who had been appointed to command the fourth division of the army of the Punjab, to consist of Wheeler's brigade and two regiments under Colonel Hoggan, and who now took the command of the force, as senior officer. Brigadier Wheeler's brigade (4,000 men), and Brigadier Pope, with H.M.'s 9th lancers and the 1st and 6th light cavalry, joined the camp on the 18th and 19th. The brigade of Colonel Pennycuick, consisting of H.M.'s 24th, and the 22nd and 25th N.I., with Major-General Thackwell, and the head-quarters of the third division, and the head-quarters of the second division, under Major-General Gilbert, with Colonel Mountain's brigade, consisting of H.M.'s 29th and the 13th and 30th N.I., followed. The grand convoy left Ferozepore on the 15th November, escorted by the 3rd and 9th irregular cavalry, and 15th and 69th N.I., with 800 bullock-loads of ammunition.

The Commander-in-Chief arrived at Ferozepore on the 5th, and, after a stay of three days, reached Lahore on the 13th, encamping at Anarkullee. Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, Sir F. Currie, Rajah Tej Singh, and other personages of distinction, went out to meet him near Meean Meer, when the Maharajah presented a nuzzur of Rs.2,100, and the sirdars each a superb bow and arrow, as is usual with Sikh chiefs. Lord Gough declined a formal interview with the Maharajah, telling him, from his howdah, that his presence was required on the field of battle; but when all was settled, he would have time to converse with the Maharajah and his friends. Lord Gough crossed the Ravee on the 16th, to take the command of the army now assembled in that dooab.

General Campbell, on the approach of the Commanderin-Chief, changed his camp on the 17th, moving from Dadun-Singh-ka-killah to Allipore, a village eight miles from Ramnuggur, where the Sikhs were said to be still in force. They had occupied Allipore, whence they had retreated, leaving large supplies there, of which [our troops took possession. On the 19th, General Campbell proceeded on a reconnoitring expedition towards Ramnuggur, but the Commander-in-Chief forbade all attempts to bring on an engagement with the enemy until he arrived in camp, which he expected to join on the 21st November. The grand convoy, however, would not arrive before the 25th, when it was supposed that the army would advance to the Chenab in two divisions, one by Ramnuggur, the other by Wuzeerabad. This force would consist of 20,000 men, all in high health and spirits, with 70 pieces of artillery, including three regiments of dragoons, five of regular and four of irregular cavalry, four regiments of European and fifteen of native infantry. An army of reserve of 12,000 men, under Major-General Hill, is to be formed at Ferozepore.

The insurgents against whom the army of the Punjab is in the first instance to be directed are calculated to number 36,000 troops of all arms, under Shere Singh and his brother, who with about 15,000 men, and 80 or 90 cannon, were posted on the right bank of the Chenab; and Chuttur Singh, who was on the 7th November to the westward of the Indus, expecting to be joined by the Sikh troops at Peshawur.

These troops, in spite of the efforts of Major Lawrence, the resident, on the 23rd October, broke out into mutiny, and on the following night a Mahomedan regiment, on which great reliance was placed, fired on the residency. Major Lawrence, with Lieut. Bowie, Mr. Thompson, the apothecary, and his wife, finding that all the Punjabi companies in the residency compound were turning against them, effected their escape, though with great difficulty, and under an escort of 50 Affghan horse, reached Kohat safely on the 25th. A Lahore letter states that the attempts of Chuttur Singhupon the fidelity of the troops were abortive until backed by the Barukzye brothers, Sooltan Mahomed Khan and Peer Mahomed Khan. "It appears," says the writer, "that, from the beginning to the end, these two Barukzye chiefs have kept up a private understanding with Chuttur Singh." The latter is said to have made an arrangement with Sooltan Mahomed Khan, by which he and his brother were to have the province of Peshawur made over to them in the event of Chuttur Singh's success.

The garrison of Attok still remained faithful, but rumours of their disaffection were afloat; and Captain Abbott appears to maintain his position in the Hazereh country, being still in the fort of Nara, in Gundghur. Nothing is reported of the movements of the detachments of Golab Singh's troops, under Colonel Steinback; that maharajah was, by the last accounts, still at Cashmere, and his forces were on the boundary-line of his territory.

The Governor-General had arrived at Allahabad on the 10th November, and was to start the following day, by dak, for Umballah.

The presidential intelligence comprises few topics of in-Some stir had been produced at Calcutta by an attempt to tamper with the sepoys at Dum Dum. A native, named Pertaub Chund, who made much noise and disturbance some years ago, by claiming to be the veritable Rajah of Burdwan, and who has since been living an idle life at Calcutta, where he possesses much influence over his countrymen, set on foot a wild plot to seize upon Fort William, murder the European officers, and hoist the "red flag" of the soi-disant rajah. All this was to be effected by corrupting the native troops at Dum Dum and Barrackpore, not, it would appear, by money in esse, but by the promises of the plunder of Calcutta in posse. The names of various chiefs and potentates,-including the Rajah of Nepaul and the King of Oude,-were freely employed by the foolish man and his more foolish agents; but the first native soldier tampered with, a havildar-major of the 16th grenadiers, revealed the fact to his commanding officer, and Pertaub Chund was immediately arrested. The apprehensions of Sir H. Maddock, the Governor-General's locum tenens, led him too hastily to order the arrest of an agent of the imprisoned Ranee of Lahore,—a quiet and inoffensive man, well known for many years to the respectable part of the European community of Calcutta,—who was released by a writ of Habeas Corpus, nothing being discovered tending to criminate him. Whether the plot was the offspring of the crazy brain of Pertaub Chund, or he was the tool of the disaffected Sikh sirdars, will, perhaps, appear hereafter. The adjudication of insolvency against the brothers Dey, recusant shareholders of the Union Bank, has been cancelled,-the creditors having abandoned the proceeding, upon the brothers consenting to pay the sum (three lakhs each) at which they were assessed under the scheme of liquidation.

From Madras, the only item of political intelligence is a report from Hyderabad that the minister, Sooraj-ool-Moolk, is really to be dismissed. From Bombay there is nothing to notice.

The Ceylon papers announce, with a "hurral for repeal," the abandonment of three out of the four obnoxious taxes,—namely, the dog-tax, the shop-tax, and the guntar

The present mail has been delayed three or four days, owing to H.M.'s steamer Oberon, which left Malta on the 25th December, having in a gale of wind burst one of her boilers, which obliged her to return to Malta on the 27th, and the mails were transferred to H.M.'s steamer Medusa.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN BENGAL.

It may be thought that we assume too much in ascribing the state of backwardness and misery which characterizes the most fertile portion of our Indian empire to defects in the system of police or criminal justice. The blame, it will be alleged, rests upon the immoral character of the natives, their religion, their inveterate evil habits and customs; and far be it from us to palliate or deny the sinister influences which these unitedly do exert. What we mean to affirm is, that these are not the sole causes in operation.

The last published Report of the Superintendent of Police for the Lower Provinces states the number of offences ascertained by the police to have been committed during the year 1846 to be 119,932. Residents in the Mosussil estimate the amount of crime unreported to the magistrates at two or three times this amount. This would raise the total of offences actually committed to 240,000. Assuming two persons, on an average, to be concerned in each criminal case, the number of persons guilty of some offence during the year may be taken as I in 130 of the whole population, which would show that crime is five or six times more abundant in Bengal than in England. This is an astounding fact, and should make all who are interested in the welfare of India perceive that something must be

The following are some of the reforms we would advocate:-1. The separation of the executive and judicial functions, at present united in one individual (the magistrate). 2. An improved system of convict labour and prison discipline. 3. The introduction of a summary and much less severe punishment for perjury. 4. A more uniform and centralized system of police. 5. An increase in the pay of subordinate Thanah officers. 6. Limitation of the power of appeal in criminal cases. 7. The education of the sons of large landed proprietors.

Our readers are probably not aware of the number of cooks whose unanimity is necessary to avert ruin from the forensic pottage. If a robbery or murder occurs, the complainant deposes takes the evidence of every one who knows anything of the matter, and of half the village besides. He makes a map or drawing of the scene, and, after a stay of several days, forwards a quire or two of well-scrawled paper to head quarters. An order shortly arrives to send up the case for a second investigation before the magistrate. Here every thing is recommenced and repeated de novo. From ten days to three weeks more are consumed, and finally, a parcel, the very sight of which would appal a dawk bearer, is transmitted to the judge, who appoints a day, according to his expected leisure, or the usual period of the sessions, for the trial. Repetition to a greater degree than before protracts the trial till a month or more from the time of the occurrence, and the witnesses are beginning to forget all they knew. At length the day of decision approaches; a grim and bearded gentleman (the Maulavi) is requested to declare what the sentiments of Abu Hunifah, or the Companion of the Prophet, would have been upon the case; and if the judge cannot conscientiously endorse the futiva, he is to forward the case to the Nizamut Adalut, for trial the fourth. - Calcutta Review.

The principle of all rational conquerors has been to adopt for their whole subjects, as a general rule, the law of the most civilized party, be it of the conquerors, or the conquered, leaving to each party its own peculiar and domestic usages. Thus the Goths adopted the Roman law, and the Tartars, twice over, have adopted the laws of China. The Mahomedan conquerors of India (Turks and Persians, a very superior people to the Hindoos) imposed their laws on the latter. The Saxons imposed their laws on the Britons, the Normans on the Saxons, and both on the Irish; the Franks theirs on the Gauls. We, alone, have adopted an opposite rule in India. The Mahomedan law,—the law of about one-tenth part of our population,—is the basis on which we have hitherto legislated. We even make a boast of adopting a barbarous code, and rejecting our own, which, with all its faults, it would be very ridiculous to insist, is not immeasurably superior to the laws of any intolerant race of semi-barbarians. We have, in fact, in two ways, reversed the practice of all rational conquerors. We have adopted the most barbarous code of laws, and we have virtually robbed our own people of their domestic institutions, by subjecting them to foreign and incompetent tribunals .- Crawfurd, on the "Black

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. C. R. Prinser has been appointed to officiate as advocate-general for the presidency of Fort William in Bengal, in the room of Mr. J. W. Colvile, until further orders; and Mr. L. Clarke to officiate as the Hon. Company's standing counsel in the room of Mr. C. R. Prinsep.

Ma. E. A. Painser.—The eminent attainments of Mr. E. A. Prinsep in the Sanskrit language having been brought by the examiners of the college of Fort William to the notice of government, the hon. the deputy governor of Bengal has been pleased to confer on him a degree of honour, as prescribed by section XV. of the rules of the college.

CAPT. T. J. W. HUNGERFORD.—The hon, the dep. governor has conferred a degree of honour on Brev. capt. T. J. W. Hungerford, of artillery, for his eminent attainments in the Hindee LOODIANAH, Nov. 18.-The left wing of the 4th N.I. has moved to Nakodah, the H.A. and left wing 13th I.C. to Ferozepore, all on the 16th. The Governor-General comes dak from Saharunpore to Ferozepore. The right wing, 13th I.C., to Ferozepore when relieved by the wing of the 4th N.I. The right wing, 13th I.C., moves said that the 5th joins Brigadier Wheeler's brigade when relieved by the 34th.

LIFUT. EDWARDE'S 15TH N.I.—We regret extremely to hear of a fatal accident that occurred at Ferozepore on the 15th instant, to Lieut. Edwardes, of the 15th N. I. Lieut. Edwardes was riding home from the ghaut at a fast pace, when his horse, becoming entangled in some ropes in the engineer's park, came down very heavily. Lieut, Edwardes fell off and broke his neck,—Mofus-silite, Nov. 21.

CONDUCTOR RYLAND .- The Mofussilite mentions that the Court of Directors have granted to Conductor Rylan a licutenant's commission for his gallant conduct in the field.

Loss of the Helen.-The Englishman supplies a long account of the loss of the Helen of Bombay, Capt. Biale. which foundered near Culpce. We have extracted the paragraph descriptive of the cause of the catastrophe :- " On the 12th Nov., just at 4 A.M., the ship took a shear, so much so as to cause her to turn round with her head down the river on a spring ebb tibe, with forty-five fathoms of chain out, from this, the vessel damaged her fore foot severely; when weighing this morning at low water it was sometime before the chain could be got clear of the fore foot, when clear, ship was still very unmanageable, and obliged to warn the steamer to keep clear until hove short, and whilst in the act of passing hawsers, the ship took a shear to eastward, and unavoidably, took the ground and laid on her beam ends in 31 fathoms, drawing 21 feet 7 inches, the commander of the steamer Rattler did his utmost to save the crew." The only lives lost were two female servants and some lascars, the rest were saved by the steamer Rattler.

THE 20TH N. I. reached Delhi on the 8th Nov.

Segowlie to Sultanpore Benares.

FUTTERPORE, Nov. 12th. - The quiet of our little station was sadly disturbed on the evening of the 11th Nov., by the total destruction of the Opium Agent's Bungalow by fire. It appears that the flames commenced in the South West corner of the roof, and in the short space of half an hour the walls alone remained the wreck of its ravages.

THE RIGHT WING AND HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE 5TH IRREGU-LAR CAVALRY (now at Meerut) are to march, with as little delay as possible, to Mukkoo.

The 17th N.I., on their way from Jhansi to Delhi, have received their route for Loodianah.

FEROZEPORE letters mention that the engineers' park is all ready, with the 1st class siege train, to move to Lahore. 15th, 69th, 4th, and 2nd co. 4th bat. artillery, and the 3rd and 9th irr. cavalry were to move to Lahore on the 17th instant. Brigadier Cheape and several other engineer officers had proceeded to Mooltan by boats.

LIEUT. RICHARDSON, 49th N.I.—The Englishman publishes the following letter, which has been addressed by the Commander-in-Chief to Lieut. Richardson, of the 49th regt. N. I.:-

" Simla, Oct. 2nd, 1848. "My Dear Mr. Richardson,-Your heroic conduct at the late theme of praise, and I cannot deny myself the gratification of assuring you, under my own hand, how highly I admire your conduct, and how anxious I shall be to prove this by requesting you to let me know how I can serve you, or what appointment would best suit you. I rejoice to hear your wounds are doing so well. Believe me always very sincerely yours, "(Signed)

Gough. "To Lieut. and Adjt. Richardson, 49th regt. N.I."

FIRE OF THE BATTERIES AT MOOLTAN. - The Delhi Gazette gives the details of the effects of the fire of the batteries at Mooltan; it reports that Captain Maitland, of the 72nd regi-ment N.I. was mortally wounded.—A letter from Lahore, dated the 8th instant, announces that the Seiks have abandoned their positions at Wuzeerabad. - Englishman, Nov. 18.

NAGODE.—A letter dated the 25th October, says:—" We (right wing 55th regiment, N.I.) arrived here on the 21st, under command of Major Jellicoe to relieve the 19th N.I., we march to-morrow morning (26th) towards Meerut, Captain C. Brown also leaves to-morrow by dawk to join his regiment, (the 18th N.I.) having been relieved yesterday by Mr. Glover, C.S., who will act as Political Agent till Captain Brown's return,

THE Commander-in-Chief was at camp Burras Nadran on the 18th inst., and at camp Mooltan on the 19th; on the 20th his lordship was to be at Nall Wallah, about twenty miles from Ramnuggur. The Earl of Gifford had joined his excellency's camb. - Mofussilite, Nov. 24.

SUGAR CULTIVATION IN INDIA. - The Bengal Government has obtained returns which, though they cannot be relied on as perfectly accurate, no doubt afford an approximation to the truth, respecting the cultivation of sugar in India; whence it would appear that the land cultivated with cane is, in Bengal and the N.W. provinces, 2,502,609 bigas; in the Madras provinces, 81,947; and in that of Bombay, 77,346; total, 2,664,902 bigas; and that the produce of cane and date goor is, in Bengal and N.W. provinces, 18,734,909 maunds (of 82 lbs.); in Madras, 1,762,957; and in Bombay, 652,527; total, 21,150,393 maunds, or about 774,250 tons. The consumption is less than the production by about 92,000 tons, and 67,000 tons is the largest amount ever exported.

THE DEPOSED RAJAH OF COORG, who has been residing at this station during the last fifteen years, and whose mild, gentlemanly, and quiet demeanour gained him universal respect and sympathy, wishes to remove himself to England, as it is believed that he has the concurrence of Government to settle in any place that he may choose as a temporary or permanent residence. His object is to educate a very interesting child-a daughter, now about seven years old-entirely on European principles. He desires that her morals, manners, habits, thoughts, and accomplishments shall be based on the English system, and that she shall grow up eventually into the station of a lady in Europe. This idea the rajah has cherished for a long time, and is now anxious to realize. The child is of good temper, and already far beyond Indian intelligence. The rajah, for some time past, has reared her as an European child; her dress, establishment, and little society, have been entirely that of a child of an European gentleman.—Benares Recorder, Nov. 1.

THE MODERN SEROYS.—It must be admitted that our native soldiery are inferior to those who fought under Clive, Lake, and Wellesley, and many causes have been assigned for the deca-dence. One reason undoubtedly is, that much less attention is now paid to the men by their immediate superiors, and the haughtiness of the subalterns towards them is greater than ever. The old sepoy officers, and very many of the present veterans, knew the men under their command, their habits, ideas, and in many instances their individual character and local prejudices. A sepoy above all things likes to be listened to, to be allowed to tell his grievance, and to tell it in his own way, with all the "says I" and "says he" so conspicuous among the lower classes in all countries. He is not particularly anxious for redress; the patience of his race enables him to bear oppression; but he desires to know that his superiors are acquainted with his idea of the matter. Too often an impatient sub, with with his idea of the matter. an imperfect knowledge of the language, growls out a rookhaut, and the native departs discontented with his service and his superiors. Many other slight circumstances contribute, such as the number of elder officers absent on political affairs, the consequent power thrown into the hands of subalterns, and the difficulty of making officers and men "pull together," a difficulty now so great, that we have heard veteran officers in the Company's army declare, that the regiments would be much more serviceable if there were but three European officers, colonel, quartermaster, and adjutant. But without going into that question, we believe that the real root of the evil consists in the neglect of any proper system of enlistment; a native havildar and two others are sent to raise men from the district around their own dwellings, and, as a matter almost of course, they give the preference to their own relatives and friends, or more particularly to any of their own caste, who may happen to reach the standard. - Friend of India.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.—We are glad to learn that Lord Dalhousie has revived a practice which was too much neglected by his immediate predecessors in office, we mean that of visiting the principal stations on his tour up the country, and becoming acquainted with and known to the native aristocracy, and those by whom 'justice is administered and the public revenues col-lected throughout the presidency. The good effects which attend and follow the occasional presence of a Governor-General in the interior are perhaps little thought of, but they are incalculable. A few civil words from the representative of majesty. the fountain-head of honour and advancement, will do more to encourage the ambitious and stimulate the idly-disposed than bales of official wigs or oceans of official butter. Nothing is so well calculated as a graceful compliment from the lips of a Governor-General to awaken in the hearts of Hindoo and Mahomedan gentlemen such loyalty as they are capable of feeling. No European can form an idea of the honour conferred upon a native of India, both in his own estimation and in that of the whole community to which he belongs, by personal speech with the ruler of the country, and still more by a dress of honour from his hands. A native of respectability and good family, who has received such a mark of distinction, values it as his dukedom, forgets perhaps the substantial grievances he has to complain of, and would rather submit to any sacrifice than, by incurring the least suspicion of disloyalty, forfeit the izzut which has been so cheaply bestowed on him. Lord Dalhousie has very wisely taken with him Mr. Halliday, whom eleven years' experience of the government of Bengal must have rendered familiar with almost every thing and every person worth knowing in the country. He could not have chosen a more able cicerone, and we dare say Mr. Halliday will not be sorry to refresh his ideas and recruit his stamina after so long a bondage within the precincts of the ditch .- Friend of India.

SUPREME COURT, Oct. 10-12.

Mr. C. Daubeny (assistant-surgeon) was indicted for the wilful murder of the infant child found in the apartment of the late Mrs. Frere.

The Advocate-General, for the prosecution, stated the case. About four months ago, the corpse of a child was found in a house in a retired spot, and upon examination of the body, it exhibited marks of violence; a wound in its neck was sufficient to have caused death. An investigation was instituted, and the result was the present indictment. The child would be identified as that found in a box in the house of a lady (lately deceased) of standing in society, the daughter of the bishop of this diocese. It would appear pretty clearly that the child was the child of this lady, who had for a very considerable time past lived separate from her husband. Every effort, therefore, on her part would be made to conceal her pregnancy. The lady was then living in good repute, and was in a situation in life which commanded respect. A circumstance of this nature, if known, would blast her reputation for life, and therefore there was every reason for her concealing her pregnancy. The prisoner was in the service of the Government, and had lived for some time previously to the birth of the child close to this lady's house. He was constantly at Mrs. Frere's house, from morning to night, and latterly had been living in the same house with her. were, therefore, similar reasons on his part to conceal the pregnancy of Mrs. Frere. It would be proved that the first acquaintance between the prisoner and Mrs. Frere took place towards the end of October or the beginning of November last year. It would also appear that Mrs. Frere about this time went to Ootacamund, passed several days there, and went to a ball. It would also appear that, while these parties were living together and in the same house, the prisoner suddenly left Kotagherry and went to Ootacamund, where Mrs. Frere followed him, and arrived on the 20th December. It would appear that, for several months previous to her arrival, the servants had observed her appearance, and had come to the conclusion that she was pregnant. Such were the circumstances previously to December, showing that Mrs. Free was in a pregnant state. On the 20th December she is found preparing for a journey to Ootscamund, where the prisoner had gone before,—a sudden journey, and for which she was not prepared, for she had to borrow a palankeen, and appeared in great pain, and exceedingly anxious to get on. From Mrs. Ryan's statement it would appear that Mrs. Frere was not expected until the 21st December. The prisoner When he met met her some short distance from the hotel. her, he got off his horse, and ordered the palankeen-bearers to set down the palankeen and go to a distance, and they did so, the communication being made to them through the maty of Mrs. Frere. The prisoner's horsekeeper was also ordered to a distance; and the prisoner then opened the palankeen door and sat there and communicated with Mrs. Frere for more than twenty-five or thirty minutes. After this, the prisoner got up, mounted his horse, and rode on to the hotel. Mrs. Frere followed in the palankeen, the doors of which were kept closed until she arrived at the hotel. Between the time of the prisoner's riding off and the arrival of the palankeen at the hotel, the maty who was accompanying the palankeen said he heard the voice of a child. On the arrival of the palankeen at the hotel, the prisoner ordered that it should not be taken to the front door, but to the back, by a circuitous and difficult route, to that part of the hotel where the prisoner was living. It was a most material fact, that the prisoner denied he ever did order that the palankeen should be set down some two miles before coming to Ootacamund, and also that he ever gave the order for the palankeen being taken to the back of the house. Upon the palankeen being taken to the back of the hotel, the bearers were ordered away, and they went to the front of the house, where they could see nothing. No one went near the parties during this interval, nearly an hour. After this, the prisoner came out and ordered the palankeen away, and then admitted the servants into the house; but, from that time, nothing was heard of any child living in the hotel. If any sudden disorder had taken place, as had been stated by the prisoner had been the case, it would only appear probable that some female belonging to the hotel would have been called in to assist. But no such assistance was called for, and when the servants went into the room, they observed she was reclining, and in an apparent state of suffering. One of the servants was then called, and told to bring in a gram-box belonging to the prisoner. The servant brought the box, and having emptied the gram out, as he was ordered, he delivered the box and its key to the prisoner. gram-box having been brought, dinner was then ordered. Every means were taken by Mrs. Ryan to keep the prisoner out of the hotel, but he persisted in sleeping at the hotel, and the man who used to make his bed was not allowed to do so on this evening. Mrs. Frere sat up at dinner, but soon after was found re-clining on the sofa. During dinner, two of the servants were ordered to go into the bed-room to get some porter. When they went into the bed-room, they looked for a child, but they saw none; the gram-hox was there, and they tried to open it, but it was locked, and they could not open it. The evening passed, and early next morning the prisoner and Mrs. Frere were seen together in the sitting-room. Nothing was allowed to be done by the servants in the bed-room that day. The prisoner and Mrs. Frere passed the day together, and Mrs. Ryan still objecting to the prisoner's being at the hotel, he slept at the club that night. The next day Mrs. Frere left the hotel in a tonjon, on her return to Kotagherry, the prisoner following her. On that occasion, a sheet was taken away from the hotel, and neither it nor the blanket she had in the palankeen was returned. had not gone far when she met her ayah in the palankeen. Mrs. Frere then got out of the tonjon, being much distressed, and travelled the remainder of the distance to Kotagherry in the palankeen. After Mrs. Frere's return to Kotagherry, she was very weak, and laid on her couch more than usual; but soon after she took to riding-exercise again, and the servants all concurred in saying her appearance was quite different now to the time when she went to Ootacamund. The gram-box was taken by a coolie at the same time that Mrs. Frere went to Kotagherry, where it was left for a fortnight, and then returned to the prisoner. The ayah saw the box opened, and the smell from it was very offensive. It would also appear that another box, which had always stood in the sitting-room, after the arrival of the gram-box, was then placed in the verandah. Upon the examination of the house after Mrs. Frere's death, this box was opened (the house had been previously sealed up), and when the box was opened an offensive smell was apparent. On further examination, many papers were found belonging to Mrs. Frere, which were taken out, and upon opening some wrappers which were under and much blood-statued, a child was discovered, quite dry. The child was then replaced in the box, and subsequently, with the papers, was sent to the magistrate of the district. Also, on examining what the child was wrapped up in, there were, among other things, the half of a pair of trousers, which the ayah recognized as belonging to Mrs. Frere. the investigation was going on, the prisoner proffered his evidence to show that the child was not Mrs. Frere's, and offered to prove so by letters. He also asked to have the body of Mrs. Frere exhumed, in order to prove by examination that Mrs. Frere had not had a child at all. The jury were to judge from the conduct of the prisoner, and from the circumstances of the case,—that the child must have come by a violent death, and that it came by its death at the time or a very short time after it came into the world,—whether any one could have done the deed unless it were either the prisoner or Mrs. Frere. Then came the nature of the wound; and it would appear that it was such a wound as must have been inflicted by some one well acquainted with the quickest mode of destroying life.

The following witnesses were then called:

Lieut. T. W. Gibson, A.D.C. to Gen. Gibson, commanding the southern division of the Madras army, proved the finding, at Kotagherry, in the house occupied by Mrs. Frere, of a box (produced) containing written papers, some of them very much stained, and the body of a child in a bundle; also a small hammer, an axe, shells, and other articles; part of a pair of trowsers (identified) formed a portion of the wrapper round the body.

Mr. G. Haldwell, apothecary in the Company's service, attached to Kotagherry, corroborated the evidence of Lieut. Gibson as to the finding of the corpse. On cross-examination, he said he had opened the body of Mrs. Frere, which did not exhibit the appearance of recent child-bearing.

Cruz, ayah to Mrs. Frere, deposed to circumstances which led her to believe that her mistress was pregnant. Remembered the prisoner's appearance at Kotagherry. Mrs. Frere had gone the prisoner's appearance at Kotagherry. Mrs. Frere had gone to Ootacamund, and when she returned he was with her; she noticed the change in her condition. The prisoner used at first to reside in another house adjoining, where he slept, taking all his meals with Mrs. Frere, and leaving late at night; but afterwards he resided there altogether, and slept in the sitting-room. The prisoner and Mrs. Frere used to walk out together, or go out on horseback. One morning her mistress ordered a palankeen to go to Ootacamund; her health was not good; she walked to and fro while the palankeen was getting ready; she was crying, and seemed to suffer much. The bearers were men who worked in the jungles; she told them to take her quick, and not shake her. The witness deposed as to the articles of linen which she put into the palankeen. On the return of the palankeen she looked into it, and found another bed of sheep-skin. Her mistress ordered her to follow two days afterwards. She went, and met her returning in a tonjon. Cooly people were bringing a wooden box lined with tin, which she had seen before in the possession of the prisoner's servant. The lady was a good deal tired, and fainting; she was very thin and weak, and told her to come into the tonjon, and allow her to go into the palankeen. On arriving at Kotagherry, she saw her mistress lying on the couch; she noticed she was very thin, and was quite sure she was in a different condition. The cooly brought the box, and the lady said that all the dirt was in it; the box was placed in the passage, and afterwards taken into her mistress's dressing-room; she did not see it opened until the washerwoman came; it had a very bad smell, like bad blood; she afterwards saw the box (produced) in the passage, and identified the cloth and other articles of wearing apparel found in it as the property of Mrs. Frere. The leg of the trowsers wrapped round the body of the child had been worn by her mistress.

Maddha, and another palankeen-bearer, proved that they carried Mrs. Frere, in December last, from Kotagherry to Ootacamund. She appeared to be suffering great pain, and told them not to shake her; they went on until within two Indian hours' distance of Ootacamund, when they met the prisoner on horse-back, who told them to put the palankeen down and go away. They went out of sight, and on their return found the doors of the palankeen shut, and saw the prisoner mount his horse and go away. They took the lady up, and went on to Ootacamund. When they got to the hotel, they saw the prisoner, who told the maty to tell them to go round by the back of the house, where there was a passage hardly wide enough for a palankeen. They put it down and went away, as ordered; they came back in an hour or two and took it away: it was then empty.

Aurookum, Mrs. Frere's maty, confirmed the testimony of the ayah, and deposed to hearing the cry of a child shortly before the palankeen arrived at Ootacamund.

Abel Adam, till lately a maty in the employ of Mr. Daubeny, went to Ootacamund with him in June, 1847. Mrs. Frere and the prisoner went together to a ball there; they lived together after that, and he returned with her to Kotagherry. The witness described the visit of Mrs. Frere to Mrs. Ryan's in December, and explained, that his master instructed him to order the bearers out of sight, where the palankeen was set down at the bath-room. After the lady arrived, the prisoner ordered him to bring the gram-box from the bathing-room. He gave it to him on the way to the bed-room, into which she went. He saw the signs of suffering, and remarked the change in her appearance. When he went to take up the gram-box he found it locked, and the prisoner said, "Don't; this must go with Mrs. Frere." He had never been asked for the key before. He found the grambox again in Mrs. Frere's house.

The washerwoman, Teroomallay Ummal, proved that Mrs. Frere, from all appearances (to which the witness deposed minutely), had been delivered of a child.

Mrs. Ryan, the hotel-keeper at Ootacamund, deposed that Mrs. Frere came to her hotel several times. She came to a ball at Ootacamund the latter end of October or beginning of November last year. The prisoner resided at the hotel from June until December; Mrs. Frere was frequently there during these When Mrs. Frere came for the ball, Mr. Daubeny left the hotel for a time. For months before December, the witness knew that Mrs. Frere would come to Ootacamund to spend the Christmas holidays. Thinks the prisoner came on the 18th. Received several letters from him between the 18th and 20th regarding Mrs. Frere's coming to the hotel, to which she objected. On the 20th she received a letter from the prisoner, informing her that Mrs. Frere would arrive in a few hours; in reply, witness objected to Mrs. Frere and the prisoner remaining in the hotel at the same time, and offered Mrs. Frere her cottage. (Letter read, referring to reports regarding the conduct of Mrs Frere and the prisoner). She left the hotel herself on the 20th, before Mrs. Frere's arrival, and kept away that and the following day, returning each night to sleep. Mrs. Frere left the hotel on the 22nd; Mr. Daubeny did not return to the hotel. Witness missed a sheet belonging to the hotel; Mrs. Frere told her that she had taken it. From the 20th to the 22nd she did not hear of Mrs. Frere being unwell. Mr. Daubeny had four rooms in the hotel. When at Ryan's cottage, at Kotagherry, remembered seeing a box opened; the box produced was very like it. The box contained dresses, shells, and other curiosities, but nothing offensive. This was about the end of February or beginning of March.

Cross-examined:—Mrs. Frere had heard certain rumours, and came to Ootacamund to show herself. It may have been a month or two before the 20th December; it was before the ball.

The rumours she heard were that Mr. Daubeny and Mrs. Frere were living together; she heard this in November or the beginning of December. Mrs. Frere made Mr. Daubeny's acquaintance a day or two before the last ball, and it was prior to that she came to Ootacamund to show herself. She came on horseback, and went to church.

By the Court:—On the occasion of assisting in dressing her for the ball, did not observe anything in her figure to attract attention. Mrs. Frere always dressed tightly. She looked in good health, and was very fair. On observing that the dress was short-waisted, Mrs. Frere said the tailor had spoiled it.

J. L. Ranking, an assistant-surgeon in the E.I.C. service, examined. - Went to the Neilgherries in January, 1847. Knew the prisoner well. Remembered going to Major Hall, on the 7th June, 1848, to see a box opened. (Box shown.) That was the box; it was then sealed. He broke the seal. Only Major Hall and himself were present. The box contained manuscript papers, a hand-axe, soiled clothes, and the body of a child; believed these to be the same. Closed the box and re-sealed it, and remained until the arrival of Dr. Packman. Proceeded together to examine the child. Witness's attention was attracted to an incision on the neck, on the left side, immediate about the collar-bone, upwards of an inch in length; the sides of the wound were separated at the centre, about a quarter of an inch. The hair on the head appeared more fully developed than at childbirth; the hair was of a stouter texture, and of a reddish brown. As far as he could examine the wound, it appeared to have passed down quite inside to the spine. The spinal column was perfect. The spinal marrow had been destroyed in the same manner as the brain. He knew the wound had reached the spine, because the muscular fibres running down the side of the column had been divided. From the external surface of the wound, it was a mere matter of opinion that the incision had passed posterior to the carotid artery. The artery was not present, to speak positively. Judging from the depth of the wound, there was no doubt it would have caused death if inflicted on a living child. A wound on an artery was more likely to prove fatal than on a vein. The edges of the wound denoted a clean incision. The edges were well defined,—not ragged, but smooth. Both edges were equally clean. The opinion he could form was, that the incision must have been made by a very sharp instrument. If the instrument had only one edge, it would have presented the same appearance. He should say the instrument was rounded at the point. It was not necessarily double-edged. It must have been equally sharp at one end of the incision as at the other. Such a wound would probably occasion death in a few minutes. From various data, conceived the child had reached its full maturity; it was a male; the colour of the skin was dark brown. From its appearance, witness could not say whether it had been born four, five, six, or seven months before. It was his opinion the child must have been exposed to atmospheric influence before it had been placed in the box. It was quite possible for a female within two months of her delivery to make a journey from Kotagherry to Ootacamund. To sit up on the same day of childbirth was quite possible. He had no doubt that appearance of pregnancy might be concealed up to the time of confinement. It was possible for a female, from resolution and a strong physical constitution, three days after childbirth, to make a journey from Ootacamund to Kotagherry.

J. D. V. Packman, an assistant-surgeon on the Madras establishment, was also examined; his evidence went entirely to corroborate that of Dr. Ranking.

Major R. Hall, commandant of troops on the Neilgherries, deposed to various communications received by him from the prisoner, which were produced and read.

Mr. Osborne, in a very forcible speech, addressed the jury on behalf of the prisoner, and succeeded very effectually in exposing the insufficiency of the evidence; for, on the conclusion of his speech, with the exception of one, the jury intimated that they had agreed upon their verdict.

The Chief Justice then began to sum up, but before he had proceeded far, the dissentient juror intimated that he also had come to the same decision with the others of the jury, who now, without retiring from the box, delivered their verdict of Not Guilly, which was received with clapping of hands both in and out of the Court.—Abridged from the Athenœum.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. HENRY CHARNOCK BRISTOW, 25TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Oct. 17, 1848.—Lieut. H. C. Bristow, of the 25th N. I., placed in arrest by order of Brigadier Donald Macleod, commanding Jaulnah, upon the following charges:—

First Charge. - For having, at Jaulnah, on the night of July 27, 1848, been drunk when on cantonment duty, as acting captain of the day.

Second Charge .--For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at the time and place set forth in the first charge, neglected his duty, by failing to go night rounds and visit all the guards under his orders, when on cantonment duty as acting captain of the day as aforesaid.

Third Charge. — For highly unbecoming and unofficer-like conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Jaulnah, on July 28, 1848, in his report of the same date, sent in to the officer commanding Jaulnah, after coming off duty, made the following false statement, namely,—"I went night rounds at 111 r.m.," he, the said Lieut. H. C. Bristow, not having made the tour of his guards during the night preceding the date of his report.

(Signed) W. Biddle, Major, Comg. 25th regt. N.I.

Finding on the First Charge.—Not guilty.
Revised Finding on the Second Charge.—Guilty.
Revised Finding on the Third Charge.—Not guilty.

Sentence.—To be severely reprimanded in such manner as his Exc. the Commander in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. -I have confirmed the sentence of the Court, but I cannot approve of its finding on the third charge, which I deem irreconcilable with that on the second; for the Court in the one case finds Lieut. Bristow guilty of neglect of duty, in failing to go "night rounds" and visit all the guards under his orders, and in the other acquits him of having falsely stated in his report that he had gone "night rounds," he not having made the tour of his guards; and this acquittal appears to have resulted from its having been proved that the lieutenant visited the main guard on the night in question (as there is much reason to suppose on his way home from a public amusement), leaving all the rest of the guards of the cantonment unvisited.

Lieut. Bristow's report was the usual one, importing that his night duties had been completed, and I cannot allow the proceedings of this court-martial to be promulgated to the army without making it known that I will always consider that report to be an incorrect one, in which the expressions used are not true in the sense of their general military usage and acceptation, and in which it is known and expected by the party using them that they will be understood.

Lieut. Bristow is hereby reprimanded for his neglect of an important and paramount duty. He will be released from arrest, and return to his corps.

> (Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut .- General, Commander-in-Chief.

PRIVATES OF H.M.'S 84TH REGT.

Head-Quarters, Madras, Oct. 17. - At a General Court-Martial holden at Secunderabad, on the 21st Sept. 1848, and continued by adjournment to the 25th, Privates William Hogan, Patrick Halpin, James O'Neil, Thomas Payton, Jeremiah Sheehan, and William Fagan, H.M.'s 84th regt., were arraigned upon Charge. - For outrageous and highly insubordinate conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances : -

First Instance. - In having, at Secunderabad, on the 12th July, 1848, proceeded to the lines of the 8th regt. N.I., accompanied by about 150 men of H. M.'s 84th regt., and then and there unlawfully destroyed or damaged, or been concerned in destroying and damaging, a Roman Catholic chapel, situated in the said lines, and belonging to the native Christians of the 8th regt. N.I., which chapel at the time was under charge of police peons, placed over it, for its protection, by the officer commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force.

Second Instance.—In having, at the same time and place, forcibly and unlawfully entered the aforesaid Roman Catholic chapel, and removed, or been concerned in removing, therefrom, a number of images, with gold and silver ornaments, pictures, candlesticks, carpets, and other articles belonging to the native Christians of the 8th regt. N.I.

The above being in breach of the Articles of War.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following deci-

Finding.—The Court is of opinion that the prisoners are guilty of the charge.

Sentence. - Six calendar months imprisonment, and to be kept in solitary confinement for the last fourteen days of each month of such imprisonment; and further, that they each be placed under stoppages from their pay, to make good the loss or damage occasioned by their misconduct.

Approved and confirmed,

(Signed) G. H. Berkeley, Lieut.-General.

Remarks by the Lieut.-General Commanding.—These soldiers have been found guilty of destroying a chapel within the lines of the 8th N.I., and taking therefrom gold and silver religious ornaments. This robbery, for robbery it was, does not seem to have been perpetrated for the sake of gain to the individuals concerned, but brought on by most extraordinary fanaticism, which converted soldiers hitherto remarkable for discipline and good conduct, in a moment, into a wild, lawless, and destructive mob; but justice has now had its course, and these men must suffer the punishment due to their crime. The Lieut.-General has no wish or desire to interfere with the religious persuasions of the soldiers; but he will not suffer crimes to be committed by them, which no religion whatever can possibly justify, without bringing the offenders to trial. The hitherto exemplary conduct and discipline of the 84th regt., the Lieut.-General trusts, have been only partially sullied, and that the good sense of the men will by this time have shown them the folly of the conduct pursued by a few individuals, and it will give him great satisfaction again to receive such reports of the corps as will enable him to make most favourable ones to his Grace the Commander-in-Chief.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS .- The Nizam held durbar on the 9th December, at which the minister attended, and presented a nuzzur, in usual course, on account of the festival of Buckreed. Up to that date, therefore, the appearance of a good understanding between Soorai-ool-Moolk and his master was maintained. is believed certain propositions relative to the reform of the Nizam's government were referred to his lordship by General Fraser, which were disapproved by the Governor-General, but referred for the consideration of the home authorities. It has been lately rumoured at Hyderabad that a reply has been received from the Court of Directors, favourable to the resident's views. But whether this be true, or the contrary, there can be no doubt that General Fraser had applied to the Nizam for an interview with his highness, for the purpose, as is supposed, of com-municating the result of his proposals, above alluded to. A durbar was accordingly held on the 11th. The Hyderabad world were on the qui vive as to the real purport of General Fraser's communications. The opposition are confident that he has notified the recognition, by the Home Government, of the perfect independence of the Nizam, as a consequence of which, the present dewan will walk, they say, forthwith to the right about. On the other hand, the conservatives, if so they may be termed, uphold the opposite reading, and are confident that intervention, in some shape, and the continued ascendancy of Sooraj-ool-Moolk, will be the order of the day. Since writing the above, a report has reached us that the dewan has been, or positively is to be, displaced—to make room for whom is not mentioned. This also may prove a genuine Hyderabad fable; but such an issue is not improbable, considering the strenuous intrigues that have been so long in progress, with a view of bringing it about. -Athenœum, Nov. 18.

THE 27TH N.I. have been ordered from the Presidency to Kurrachee.

THE 24TH N.I. have been ordered from Kurrachee to Hyderabad.

THE HEAD-QUARTER WING OF THE 2ND GRENADIERS and wing of the 22nd N.I. it is expected, will arrive shortly at the Presidency from Poona and Baroda for garrison duty.

THE 16rm N.I., it is said, are to move from Sholapore to Poona to replace the grenadiers.

THE RIGHT WING 21st N.I. left Ruikote for Deesa on the 3rd Nov., the left was to have followed on the 18th.

THE RIGHT WING OF THE STH N.I. reached Rajkote Nov. 17th, the left started on the 18th to join the head-quarters.

THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF CALCUTTA reached Bombay in the Hon. Co.'s pilot brig Tavoy yesterday evening, Dec. I, and landed at the Apollo Bunder at seven o'clock. His lordship is in the best of health, and will preach at St. Thomas's Cathedral to-morrow forenoon. This is the third time his lordship has visited Bombay: he holds his second metropolitical visitation on the 12th instant.

BRIGADIER G. J. WILSON left the presidency on the 22nd Nov., for Rajcote, to the command of the brigade, at which station he has recently been appointed.—Captain Margary, of the sappers, has been temporarily placed in charge of the duties of the garrison engineer at the presidency, during Captain Crawford's absence in Scinde.

Mr. J. C. STEWART is we understand about to have the management of the Commercial Bank, and, however heartily we may rejoice to see an old citizen so much esteemed once more amongst us, we shall deeply regret if the accession can only be brought about by the loss of one so greatly respected, and so well deserving of respect, as Mr. S. D. Murray.—Bombay Times.

THE GAIRTIES of the season are just about commencing. Lady Falkland has held the first reception at Parell this season, and the Governor gave a public breakfast this morning. which was exceedingly well attended. Lady Falkland's evening reception was very numerously attended, and we believe the alteration in the time for seeing visitors is highly approved of, even by the greatest sticklers for ancient usage. - Telegraph, Nov. 30.

Scinde. - The Roree force were to leave betwixt the 18th and 25th. The roads from Sukkur to Bahawulpore are described as excellent-so much so that a carriage could easily be driven the whole way. Water was good and abundant, and provisions of all kinds cheap and plentiful. The advancing force had found the days rather agreeable. There was scarcely any sickness in the camp. Dr. Malcolmson, who accompanied it, was indefatigable in his numismatic researches at all the towns passed; and in an old Hindoo fort which he had discovered in the jungles, he had dug up several very curious and ancient coins of the times of the Dolorahs-at least fifteen hundred years ago. towns were large and populous, the houses generally built of burnt brick. The soil was a rich alluvial, and in many places well cultivated. The language in common use was Scinde, but many of the inhabitants spoke Persian fluently. Game was abundant. The country is described as being a dead level, with straggling low jungle. Bahawul Khan's territory commences at Subzulkote, where what may be termed Scinde Proper ends; and the country from the former place to Ooch may be considered a neutral ground betwixt Scinde and the Punjaub. Lieutenant Merewether had been detached from the camp to join Major Jacob, who was in the saddle, with one thousand of his horse in pursuit of the remains of the Bhoogtie tribe, and one thousand five hundred Murrees who had crossed the border and threatened a foray on Kusmore and other towns in its vicinity. - Telegraph.

NETHERLANDS INDIA.

The local authorities have ascertained the truth of the following occurrence, which took place in the division Mojukerto (residence of Sourabaya), and which deserves to be brought to general notice, as a new and striking proof of the attachment of animals towards their purveyors.

On the 14th March, a boy, eight years of age, in the Dessa Gilang, was herding some buffaloes in a wood not far distant from the village, when he was seized and dragged away by a tiger. At his cries, two buffaloes immediately came running up, one of which attacked the tiger, which released the boy, and seized the buffalo; a short fight ensued, ending in the flight of the tiger. The other buffalo had placed himself above the body of the boy, lying on the ground, in such a way as to protect it against a second attack of the tiger. The people of the neighbouring Desso, in the meantime, armed themselves, pursued and killed the tiger. The life of the boy, although severely wounded, is not despaired of.

The attachment which the two buffaloes showed towards their herd is explained by the circumstance, that the young natives, who take care of the pasturage of these animals, bestow an extraordinary attention on their flock; they generally remain in their vicinity, and sometimes pass a large portion of the day on their backs .- Java Courant.

FOUNDERS OF THE SIKH SECT. - Guru Govind, when acknowledged Sat-guru, or spiritual leader, of the Sikhs, first conceived the idea of forming them into a religious and military commonwealth, and "executed his design," as Mr. Elphinstone ob-serves, "with the systematic spirit of a Grecian lawgiver." He succeeded in effecting a complete change in their habits, character, and creed. The latent aim of Nanuk (the founder of the The latent aim of Nanuk (the founder of the sect) was to abolish the distinctions of caste amongst Hindus; and Guru Govind, who resolved to make this equality a funda-mental principle of the sect, is reported to have said, that the four castes of Hindus would, like pan (betel-leaf), chunam (lime), supari (areca-nut), and khat (catechu),—the constituents of the masticory given to visitors,—become all of one colour when chewed (amalgamated). It was his policy, therefore, to place all who subscribed to the Sikh doctrines, whether Bramin or Sudra, upon a level; he admitted all creeds, Mahomedan and Hindu, and, well aware how essential it was that men of low birth, nursed in the slavish notions of submission and subserviency, should be taught a sentiment of self-respect, he gave to all his followers the epithet of Singh, or 'lion,' hitherto confined to the high military caste of Hindus, with whom every Sikh now felt himself on a footing. - History of the Punjab.

It was a great oversight of the Buddhists when they first admitted images, not of Buddha, into their Vihans. I say not of the 4th Buddha, for his statue must have been coeval nearly with his worship, and it is probable that statues or images of previous Buddhus existed. Although as he had been a prince and a mortal, his votaries could hardly have required to be so re-I am not aware of the precise period when subsidiary images were introduced, but I suspect that if Buddha had, as Fă Hëen's account would imply, and the Buddhist scriptures forcibly insist on, an immediate predecessor (Kassap'ó) whose chaittyas were even then extant, the admission of such images most probably took place before Sakya Muni appeared. In whatever manner, or at whatever period, it really happened, the existence of any images in the temples beyond those of Buddha, no doubt, greatly helped the Brahmans, not only when they began to scan the path to hierarchical pre-eminence, and to sap the foundations of Buddhism, but when they eventually had esta-blished a body of heretics or schismatics within even its own Vihans ready to tolerate if not to adopt a more extensive polytheism, and thus to render the final subversion of Buddhism easy and certain.—Col. Low, on Buddhism.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Lieut. Henry Strachey, in September and October, 1846, performed a journey to the lakes of Cho Lagan (Rakas Tal) and Cho Mapan (Manasarowar), in Hundes, the Himalaya country, a narrative of which is published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for July and August.

He started from Askot, on the 10th September, where he had met two pilgrims from the holy Kailas, a Sunyasi and a Jogi, "black with dirt and half-fool," who gave him discouraging accounts of the journey. The valley of the Kali, at Dharchula, accounts of the journey. expands into a pleasant level, cultivated with rice; and the village of Kela comprises a good extent of well-cultivated land, terraced out of a huge hill, that rises in a steep uniform slope for thousands of feet above the confluence of the Dhauli or Gori with the Kali. A murrain amongst the cattle in Darma that year had carried off all the kine and half the goats and sheep. Lieut. Strachey, in consequence, proceeded, not by Darma, as he had intended, but through Byans, by Kunti and the western Descending from Kela, and crossing the Dhauli, he entered Chaudans, up a long and steep ascent, and reached Titila, 8,000 feet; the people all Bhotias. He met many Khasias, bringing salt and borex. Ascending 2,000 feet higher, the whole hill was clothed with very fine forest trees, chiefly horse-chestnut.

The true name of this country, he says, is not Hiundes, the 'snow country,' but Hundes, from Hun, the aboriginal inhabitants of the country north of the Himalaya, who are mentioned in the Mahábhárat.

The passage of Nirpania-Dhura brought him to an elevation of 10,500 feet. Proceeding on from Golam La, he saw the peaks of Byans-Rikhi, which were only partially snowed, though 20,000 feet high, and the great peak of Api, 22,799 feet. In a succession of ascents and descents, the road passed through Garbia, a village of flat-roofed houses, of two stories, 10,272 feet; the fields containing barley and wheat, and the flowers and shrubs being plentiful.

Prosecuting his journey towards Kunti, he had a fine view of the great snowy mountain Api and the peak of Nampa, the whole an immense mass of pure snow, without flaw, for a mile of vertical height. At Kunti, elevation 13,000 feet, the mountain sides had a scanty covering of brown, ill-looking grass, with a little juniper and dama, the height of 1,000 feet or so; above which is bare rock and thin snow. Barley and other grain were just reaped. The village of Kunti is ill-built; the houses are of two or three wretched stories, resting against the slope of the

He halted for a day to sort and reduce his luggage, and muster his Bhotias, with cattle and requisites to cross the snow. The party consisted of himself, Bhauna, a Kumaon Brahman, well acquainted with the country and its dialects, Anand, a relation of Bhauma, and six Bhotias, six zhobus (hill-cattle) to carry the baggage, and a couple of saddle-ponies. Mr. Strachey adopted the Hindustani costume, without, however, attempting to disguise the Ferengi complexion of his face and hair.

Leaving Kunti, they descended and crossed the river by a sanga, the valley narrowing to a mere open glen, the road continuing over a tolerably level shelf in the hill side, affording a pretty smooth and easy path a few hundred feet above the river. As they proceeded, the ground was covered scantily with grass and a few herbs, amongst which was poh (rhododendron anthropogon), then in seed. The whole plant is fragrant, and is used They crossed the Jhuling-Yankti, up which is the pass into Darma, over Lebun-Dhura, half-way between Kunti and the foot of Lankpya, the snow increasing, and beyond the Rarub Yankti, entirely covering the ground, hard enough to afford footing for man and beast. At the elevation of 15,750 feet, the rarefaction of the air began to be very sensible, in shortness of breath, in talking, and even drinking.

Crossing the Kunti-Yankti, which rises in deep beds of snow, the stream half-frozen, they ascended the mountain's side to the northward, the valley coming to an end. The snow on the ascent was hard enough on the surface to afford tolerable footing for a man, but the cattle sank deep at every step, sometimes to their chests. A long way below the top of the pass, the cattle came to a stand-still, and the Bhotias began to talk of the impossibility of getting further; but on an effort and a show of determination on the part of Mr. Strachey and the two Kumaonis, encouraged the Bhotias to get the cattle up to the crest of the pass, all much exhausted owing to the rarefaction of the air: "I felt passing heavy in the head," observes Lieut. Strachey, "as though a maund weight were hung over my neek, and the ponies were grunting and groaning in sore distress." The elevation of Lankpya-Dhura is 17,750 feet. The prospect from this height was only a dull, monotonous chaos of snow on all sides. "The imagination of the novice in these scenes," observes Mr. "The imagination of the novice in these scenes, observes Mai. Strachey, "usually anticipates wonderful prospects from the lofty summits of the Himálayan passes, the natural and political barrier-wall dividing two great kingdoms, from which the eye hopes to range one way over terraces of mountains descending to the plains of India, the other over vast expanses of Tartarian table-lands. Such views are hardly to be realized from the passable gorges of the Himálayan crest whence the prospect is intercepted by obtruding shoulders of higher mountains."

Dismissing one of the Bhotias with two zhobus, who returned to Kunti, the party descended the north side of the pass, in a succession of steep slopes, the snow deeper than the river, though superficially hardened. The laden cattle tumbled through it breast-deep, looking like ships driving before a gale in a heavy sea, the snow flying in spray before them. At the foot of the pass, they had the miserable prospect of an expanse of pure snow as far as the eye could reach. A small oasis of bare stones, on which to fix their encampment for the night, open to the freezing air, was as welcome as a verdant meadow or shady grove in the low country, and a cup of greasy tea was a grateful refection. The moisture of his breath, Mr. Strachey says, froze on his pillow during the night, and his face was as perfectly blistered as if treated with cantharides.

They now proceeded north-westward, down the valley of the Darma-Yankti (which flows into the Sutlej), travelling sometimes in the bed of the stream. From parts of the road which commanded distant views, the country appeared studded with the religious structures called choktan and manepane, little towers of stones, stuck about with dirty ragged flags.

On the 3rd October they reascended the heights, and at 17,000 feet beheld the Indian Himalaya, the view of which extended from Momonangli, on the east, to Laptel, on the west, the intermediate range assuming the appearance of a wide field or sea of snow, tossed into a thousand heaps in gigantic confusion.

Descending again into the valley of Amlang, where they saw some of the wild animals peculiar to Tibet, -including the kyang, or wild mule, -and thence into a second and third valley, they came upon the western high road leading from Pruang to Gartokh, a well-beaten track of men and cattle, thirty feet wide. Several tols, or ravines, were occupied by shepherds tending their flocks. Though harmless, they alarmed the Bhotias, who proved rank cowards.

Mr. Strachey had determined to begin his examination of the lakes with the Rakas Tal, or Rawanhrad, of Moorcroft, because it was less known than Manasarowar, though geographically more interesting (being suspected of a communication with the Sutlej), and thence to return by the Manasarowar, along the isthmus between the two lakes. On the 4th October, the party started from Jungbwa Tol for the nikas (outlet) of Rakas Tal, and soon came upon the eastern side of the lake, which is here irregular in its outline, and bounded by shelving ground and low hills. The south end receded into a deep bay, the north end sweeping round to the westward as far as could be seen. The water of the lake was of the clearest, brightest blue. "The water of the lake was of the clearest, brightest blue. surrounding hill sides, though very bare of vegetation, were tinted with many shades of red, brown, or yellow, happily varied with the margins of verdant grass in other parts of the shore, and bright sunshine spread a warm glow over the whole landscape, entirely divesting it of the cold, barren aspect that might be supposed inseparable from these intemperate regions. The beauty of this novel scene appeared to me to surpass any thing that I had seen on the south side of the Himalaya; it certainly far exceeded my expectations, and I felt already repaid for the trouble of my expedition."

The elevation of the lake (called by the natives Cho Lagan), by the temperature of boiling water, was 15,250 feet. shore showed marks of variation in the water level. Ground which appeared to have been lately inundated, then half-dry, was covered with a very thick efforescence of soda, though the water was pure and sweet. The lake was beautiful, and quite a little sea. A few ducks were on the lake, coarse, and ill-looking, dirty grey and fulvous red, and other white-looking birds, still more ill-favoured. He saw none of the grey geese, said to frequent these lakes in the rainy season.

Mr. Strachey proceeded northward, and on reaching the north-western edge of the lake, where the nikas "ought to be," it ended in swampy ground, sloping down to Changchung, a verdant hollow; but there is no visible channel from the lake, and the only effluence, Mr. Strachey says, is by filtration through the porous soil, unless it be in times of extreme flood; but he thinks the effluence of this lake contributes less to the Sutlej than others of its numerous sources in the Gangri mountains, or the Indian Himalaya.

The only permanent affluents of the lake are the La-Chu, a considerable stream rising from the south face of Kailas, close above Gangri, and the Barka, another considerable stream from a ravine east of Kailas. The other affluents, reported by Moorcroft, Mr. Strachey sets aside, and he discredits the statement of Gerard, of an island in Itakas Tal.

They now proceeded towards the other lake, and came to a large stream, 100 feet wide, running rapidly from east to west, through a well-defined channel; this was the outlet of Manasarowar, which leaves that lake from the northern quarter of its restern shore, and, winding through the isthmus of low undulating ground, falls into the Rakas Tal. The party struck Manasarowar (the Hunia name of which is Cho Mapan) at the middle of its western shore. In general characteristics, this lake is very like the other, but so much more compact in form, that their position, in the middle of the western shore, commanded a view of the whole lake, the circumference of which is about forty-five miles. The two lakes, Mr. Strachey says, "are placed together in a basin, girt about by an enceinte of hill and mountain, from which the only exit appears to be at the north-western extremity opening into the valley of Lajandak." The outlet of Manasarowar leaves the lake from the northern quarter of its western side. Its permanent affluents are three, a fourth being doubtful. The water is clear and sweet, and of the same fine blue colour as that of the other lake. In picturesque beauty, the eastern lake is hardly equal to the other. Mr. Strachey saw no signs of animal life on the Mapan lake. Its elevation was 15,250 feet.

On the 6th October they started for Pruang, the reputed fertility of which valley Mr. Strachey contradicts, ranking it below the most sterile of the inhabited parts of our Cis-Himalayan Alpine valleys. Soon after reaching the Karnali river, they wound over the shoulder of a steep, rounded hill, at the top of which was a moderate assemblage of houses: this was Taklakhar, the residence of the Pruang zungpun, of which they had a "moonlight" view. The elevation of Taklakhar is about 14,750 feet.

From hence to Garbia, which Mr. Strachey reached on the 9th October, no incident worth noting occurred. Here he found his servants, and exchanged the inhospitalities of Hundes for some of the comforts of civilized life.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

FRIDAY, January 5, 1849.

THE close of a year is one of the halting-places of Time, whence we seem to look back upon a fragment of the world's history. Many are the incidents,—besides ledger-balances and Christmas bills,—which at this season force us upon reminiscences of the past; and it is by reviewing and reflecting upon the past that we acquire useful lessons and cautions for the future.

Stupendous events have almost changed the face of Europe during the past year; centuries have, as it were, been concentrated into months; but, excepting the disorders in the Punjab and the "break up" in the commercial credit system at Calcutta, little has happened to trouble the surface of affairs in British India. Such a retrospect is favourable to the character of our Indian rule; tranquillity is the ordinary and the surest expression of a nation's content.

A year barren of events, although a tame and unattractive period to readers of history, is a propitious one to good rulers, especially rulers of such a country as India; they must, indeed, look upon repose as "non gemmis, neque purpura, venule, neque auro." The want of time, and opportunity, and political quiet, to digest plans of improvement, has been the ready and unanswerable excuse of every Governor of India since the administration of its affairs has been transferred to our hands from those of the Moguls. The fault is not theirs; it is the vice, or rather a misfortune, inseparable from the circumstances of British rule in India, in relation to the native powers, which clothe it with progressive (or, as some say, aggressive) attributes, that a stationary policy is not only irreconcilable with the security or our Indian empire, but impracticable, and the intervals of suspension of war and conquest are few and brief. The last three Governors of India furnish examples which the next three may be compelled to follow.

Lord Ellenborough, Sir Henry Hardinge, and Lord Dalhousie, proceeded to India with visions of peace, of prosperous revenues, and of the realization of benevolent schemes of social benefit for the people of India. The first was, upon his arrival, immersed in the perils and perplexities of the Cabul outbreak and the Mahratta campaign. The second was most unwillingly forced by a Sikh invasion into a war, first of defence and then of conquest, beyond our frontiers. Lord Dalhousie, in like manner, has been compelled to desert the seat of government, where he was busied with plans of domestic improvement, and to enter upon projects which, from the magnitude of the preparations, appear to embrace the conquest of an extensive territory, the cost of which will exhaust the present and pledge the future revenues of India, postponing every scheme of local and general improvement and moral amelioration which demands an outlay of money. Should our presage be correct, and the British empire be extended to the Indus, that "forbidden" river, conveniently termed the "historical boundary of India," will not be a final boundary any more than the Sutlej has been; the expansion of our line of frontiers, bringing us into contact with new neighbours, jealous of our greatness or alarmed at our proximity, will involve us in fresh quarrels, and we shall be led onward, until, as Baron Hügel predicts, we reach Herat.

This is the condition of our existence as a ruling power in India; and critics of our administration there, instead of exposing its imperfections, and proclaiming the vast amount of what has not been done to ameliorate the people, would be more just if they compared what has been accomplished with the time and means at our command,—in snatches of repose, broken by sudden political explosions, which engross the attention and the energies of the Government, amidst the financial incumbrances created by an increasing expenditure, which cannot be met, as in other countries, by increase of taxation.

THE inquiries instituted by the Select Committee of the House of Commons into the subject of the cultivation of cotton in India have accumulated a very large amount of evidence, but the result adds little to what was previously well known. The reader of the bulky volume has to wade through many superfluous questions and tedious answers. Testimony seems to have been deemed indispensable to establish facts sufficiently notorious. Perhaps the chief value of this mass of evidence consists in its tendency to remove a few misapprehensions.

The investigation was set on foot in no friendly spirit towards the Indian Government; but the Report of the Committee (of which an abstract is given is another column) is rather a vindication of the East-India Company than an inculpation of that body. The Committee dwell upon the extreme poverty of the cultivating population of India, and upon the inadequacy of the means of internal communication, which occasions an immense waste of money, time, and labour; and there can be no doubt that both these facts do in a material degree account for the stationary condition of the cotton cultivation in India. But neither is attributable, or attributed by the Committee, to the Government of India. The mode of taxation, by an assessment upon the land with reference to its productive capabilities,—in other words, with reference to the rent which, under ordinary circumstances, the cultivator would be able to pay, moderate and certain in its amount, is approved by the Committee; and this "sound system of settlement" is that which has been adopted for many years past. This, therefore, is not to be regarded as the cause of the extreme poverty of the ryots, which is perpetuated by the ruinous shifts to which they are driven in consequence of their want of capital. The "exaction" sometimes charged against the Company turns out from the evidence to be the collection of an assessment, large in appearance, because it combines rent with tax, but moderate in reality, the ryot, or cultivator, being no worse off, and perhaps in a better condition, by paying all the demands upon him in one gross sum to the Government, than if he paid a part to a landlord, as rent, and part to the State, as tax.

The deficiency of good roads in India can only be charged upon the Government when it is shown that a surplus revenue has been diverted to some other less useful object. This is not alleged to be the fact by the Committee, who, however, appear to think that roads are easily constructed, and may be made in India, as in England, by means of tolls levied upon them. Railways would at once cure this defect; but these works must be left to private enterprise, which would not be wanting, at home, if properly directed.

The prosperity of the cotton cultivation of India depends upon the simple question, applicable to every branch of trade, whether the growth of the article can be made so profitable as to yield a sufficient return for capital, which has been readily and advantageously invested in the raising of other Indian products for the home market, irrespective of the poverty of the actual cultivators, and the inadequacy of the internal communication for the requisites of commerce. A main ingredient in this question is the quality of the article. If the Indian cotton is inferior to the American, and is not susceptible of material improvement, even the attribute of cheapness will not give it the preference in our home market; but if it can be made to compete with the produce of the United States, the demand for it by our manufacturers will soon cause the flow of capital from this country to the cotton districts of India, displacing the village usurers; and the cultivators will find themselves in as good a condition as the producers of indigo and sugar. Upon this head, the Report holds out the most encouraging prospects. It has been clearly established, the Committee say, that the American plant grown in India is very superior in quality to the indigenous cotton, and more productive; in the Southern Mahratta country, and fin the province of Coimbatore, the cotton produced from New Orleans seed is equal to the American; and they are "satisfied of the power of India to supply England with cotton of a very improved quality.'

More, however, is necessary than the mere rearing of the plant to insure the quality of the wool, the value of which to the manufacturer is greatly dependent upon the processes of cleaning, storing, and packing. Here the natives of India are at least as negligent and deficient as in the processes of culture; and here the resources of European art have at length supplied their deficiency. Since the Committee closed their inquiries, a cotton-cleaning machine, for the use of the natives, has been constructed in India, which, from its simplicity, cheapness, and efficacy, is expected to accomplish the only object wanting to effect the improvement of Indian cotton.

The capacity of India to supply cotton of superior quality being proved, the application of British capital and intelligence is alone required to create a new and inexhaustible source of national wealth for both countries, far more beneficial than the discovery of a golden soil, like that of California.

DEBATE AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at the East-India House on the 20th December. Lieut-General Sir James Law Lushington, Chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The Chairman announced that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividends would be ready for delivery on the 6th of January.

FEES COLLECTED AT TEMPLES IN INDIA.

Mr. Poynder presented several petitions upon this subject, and postponed the motion of which he had given notice until a future day.

LIEUTENANT WAGHORN.

Mr. Alderman Salomons said, that in consequence of a communication he had had with the Chairman of the Hon. Court of Directors, he was induced to withdraw his notice of motion on the subject of Lieut. Waghorn, and to leave the matter in the hands of the Directors for further consideration. (Hear.)

THE RAJ OF SATTARA.

Mr. Lewis then rose to submit the following resolutions:-

"That the East-India Company having, by the first article of the treaty contracted with Maharaj Pertaub Sing on the 25th September, 1919, 'ceded the territory of Sattara to the Rajah of Sattara, his heirs and successors, in perpetual sovereignty,' and having by the first article of a treaty concluded on the 4th September, 1929, with Maharaj Shajee (commonly called Appa Sahib), solemnly confirmed that article, the East-India Company cannot alienate the territory of Sattara from the rightful heir of the Rajah of Sattara without a gross violation of public faith, and without shaking the confidence of the native powers of India in the stability of the treatles into which they have entered with the said Company.

"That the seizure of the Sattara territory by the East-India Company, by virtue of a construction arbitrarily put upon the said treaties by the stronger of the two contracting parties, would be a proceeding repugnant to every principle of justice, a breach of the law of nations, and calculated to cast a foul stain upon the character of that Company and the British Government.

upon the character of that Company and the British Government.

The proposition, he observed, involved in the resolution may be thus shortly stated-that the alienation of the Sattara state by the British Government and its annexation to our own territories in India would be a proceeding in contravention of the plain terms of the treaty, against good faith, and a dishonour and a stain on the British nation. That proposition depends obviously on the construction of two treaties; the first entered into on the 25th of September, 1819, with Pertaub Shean, and the second entered into with his brother Appa Sahib, in 1839. I would admit at once in the outset (in order to disentangle the question from any confusion that might arise from the difference of opinion entertained as to the guilt or innocence of the former rajah, Pertaub Shean), that that prince, in consequence of certain alleged acts of indiscretion, did forfeit all the rights which were secured to him by the original treaty. I admit that hypothetically, and for the sake of the argument, but only hypothetically, for as to the innocence of Pertaub Shean, nothing can ever change my strong and solemn conviction upon that point. the deposal of Pertaub Shean, the Company transferred the raj to his brother Appa Sahib, under a supplemental treaty, dated the 4th of September, 1839, the first provision of which confirmed all the articles of the treaty of 1819, with certain modifications. Those modifications merely affected the rights of certain jagheerdars, which had been the subject of dispute between the British Government and the Rajah of Sattara. It is manifest, then, that the treaty of 1819 defines the rights of Appa Sahib as they did those of Pertaub Shean. Now, by the first article of the treaty, the territories of Sattara were ceded by the British Government to Pertaub Shean, his heirs and successors, in perpetual sovereignty; and the question is, what is the extent of interest conferred by those expressions to the rajah. Those words are a translation of corresponding words in the Mahratta treaty, and therefore for their force and meaning we must look to the expressions employed in that treaty. Those words are expressed by the native terms "furzund, warris," and "koyam mookam," "Furzund" imports children or son's direct lineal issue; "warris" means heirs general; and "koyam mookam," as I undarstand actives to a passon who is substituted mookam," as I understand, refers to a person who is substituted for another—a successor. We see, then, that the phrase made use of in the English translation, namely, "his heirs and successors," clearly and distinctly mean a cession of the Sattara territories to the Rajah Pertaub Shean, his heirs lineal, and his heirs general, collateral, and that they also include, from the comprehensive terms used, an adopted child. Appa Sahib, the last Rajah of Sattara, who was placed upon the throne by the Company, is now dead, leaving no direct issue, but leaving an adopted child, and also an heir general by blood, his nearest descendant. I contend that the adopted son is entitled to succeed, and that if there has been no adoption, or if that adoption should be held invalid in consequence of some informality, the heir general of Appa Sahib is entitled to succeed as a matter of right under the treaty of September, 1819. It appears to me that that treaty confers the right of adoption by its comprehensive This is apparent if we consider the position of the two contracting parties before the treaty was entered into. On the one hand, we have an Hindoo sovereign, whose dynasty had been continued by adoption; and on the other hand we have the Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone acting as the representative of the British Government, a man deeply conversant with all Hindoo usages, customs, and laws, who perfectly well knew that the law of adoption formed part of the law of inheritance of the Hindoos. Not only so, but he also well knew that the dynasty of Sevajee had been kept up and perpetuated by the law of adoption; for I find in a letter of Mr. Elphinstone's to the Governor-General, written shortly after the treaty was entered into, and dated the 25th of October, 1819, and which is contained in the Sattara Papers, that he states that "Sahoo Raja was, on his death, in 1777, succeeded by Saloo, his adopted son, who was born of a remote branch of the family." Looking, then, at the relative position of these parties, and the knowledge that each of them possessed, is it not the fair, just, and necessary inference that, by the general words made use of in the treaty of 1819, the contracting parties intended that the right of adoption should be conveyed and given? If the British Government intended to exclude the right of adoption, was it not their duty to have expressed themselves explicitly, and in terms which could not be mistaken, upon the subject? If you look to the writers on the laws of nations you will see that they lay down this fundamental rule on the interpretation of treatics. It is objected by some who do not doubt that the terms of the treaty of 1819 are comprehensive enough to include the right of adoption, that the adoption in this case is not valid, because Appa Sahib had not the antecedent permission of the British Government. permission was not necessary in this case, because Appa Sahib was an independent sovereign. I admit that the doctrine is applicable to jagheerdars and other inferior feudatories; it existed as between the rajah, as an independent sovereign, and his jagheerdars and feudatories; it exists as between the British Government and their jagheerdars and feudatories. I have been unable to find-I do not think any one will be able to show, an instance where that doctrine has been maintained as between the British Government and native independent sovereigns. Each is the lord paramount (if I may say so) in his own country and his own province. But, if it were admitted that the treaty of 1819 did not include the right of adoption, if it were admitted that the adoption was invalid in consequence of the permission not having been obtained, I ask what then? is not the next heir by blood entitled under the clear and distinct terms of the treaty? What is there that can exclude the heir general of Appa Sahib from succeeding to the raj? The words of the treaty itself draws the distinction in terms you cannot mistake. The word "furzund" points to children—the heirs lineal; the word warris" alludes to heirs general and collateral; and the words "koyam mookam" denote (as is translated into English) successors. Can there be a doubt then that heirs general are entitled to succeed? I apprehend not. But it is unnecessary for me to discuss this point, because the British Government itself the East-India Company — has put the same construction upon the treaty as the one I am contending for. The British Government has admitted that, under the treaty of 1819, Appa Sahib was entitled to succeed, not as a lineal heir, but as the next in succession, the next heir general and collateral. Let me call your attention to some passages on this point in the minutes of Sir James Carnac and Sir Robert Grant, when acting as your representatives, and, of course, their statement binds you. "The British Government," says Sir James Carnac, "having no views of advantage or aggrandisement, has resolved to invest the brother and next in succession to the rajah with the sovereignty of the Sattara state." Now, I ask, in what right as next in suc-Now, I ask, in what right as next in succession? Not as lineal descendant, but as heir general, collateral, under the treaty, for Appa Sahib was not the son but the brother of Pertaub Shean. Again, in another passage, Sir James Carnac observes, "There was only one person on whom the investiture could be conferred." Sir Robert Grant takes the same view and puts the same construction upon the treaty, and in rather stronger terms; rather more, if I may use the expression, pointedly and practically, in a minute, contained in the Sattara Papers, at page 68, and in another passage in his minute dated Sept. 22, 1837. Now, is it possible to believe the Court will adopt another construction; that the Court will deny or repudiate its own words? Shall it be said that when certain motives and views did not actuate them, when they were not bent on acquisition of territory, they put one construction on the treaty, but when their motives and views changed - when extension of territory became their object-then, in order to carry those views and that object into effect, and for their personal benefit and aggrandizement, they adopted another construction, which they found more convenient? It appears to me that the case of the Rajah of Sattara in this instance, with reference to the point now in discussion, is, in fact, the case of all the native princes of India between whom and yourselves treaties of a similar character exist. If in this instance the right of adoption is denied, if in this instance the right of heirs general to succeed is repudiated, why, of course, it must be denied and repudiated in every other instance. It appears to me that the policy you are now pursuing, or rather which it appears is threatened to be pursued, is illiberal, selfish, and sordid; that it is a policy which is fraught with the greatest possible danger; teeming with apprehension, fear, and alarm. It is a policy which has been repudiated by some of the ablest and most distinguished statesmen whom India has produced - men who thoroughly understand the relations which subsist between the native states of India and the East-India Company, and who well know what course of policy ought to be pursued as the best calculated to promote the welfare of both parties-Sir John Malcolm, Mr. Elphinstone, Mr. Edmonstone, Lord Mintoand the high authority of the Duke of Wellington is not wanting on this point. (Mr. Lewis read a letter from Sir Arthur Wellesley to Sir Thomas Munro, dated Aug. 20, 1800, from Mr. Gleig's Life of Sir T. Munro) These, I conceive, are great and important authorities, which ought to have considerable influence upon the Court in coming to a decision in this caseauthorities which ought to have much greater influence on the Court than those anonymous letters which we see published from time to time in the public newspapers—those editorial articles, "leading articles" as they are called, which issue from time to time (hear, hear), and the arrogance, flippancy, and assumption of which clearly show from what tainted source they proceed, and with what views they are written. Why should this grasping and aggrandising policy be any longer pursued? The soundness of the opinions to which I have adverted, and which are opposed to such a policy, has been verified by the experience of the last few years. All those opinions concur in recommending quite an opposite policy; and it is in consequence of your having acted in contravention of that wiser policy that your Indian affairs have been involved in difficulties and disasters, which have paralysed your finances and endangered your empire. These are the fruits of that aggressive and selfish policy which would occupy every piece of ground in India, and rest satisfied with nothing short of universal dominion. Why should this policy be applied in the case of Sattara, a peaceful state, in alliance with us at this moment? What is there with reference to the Sattara state that can justify the application of that There is not a single circumstance to justify its aliena. policy? tion. From the commencement, the administration of Pertaub Shean has been the subject of universal commendation by the East-India Company and the British Government; the administration, also, of Appa Sahib has met with the same commendation. Do the people themselves wish any change? have they petitioned you to introduce your rule there? No, they are attached to their native institutions; they are attached to their country, they are attached to their laws and to their sovereign. All they ask is, that you should leave them alone in the enjoyment of the blessings they now possess under their own system. This course of conduct appears to me to be one wholly unworthy of the British Government and of a Christian nation. They are weak, they are, comparatively speaking, defenceless; we are, on the other hand, powerful, I had almost said we are omnipotent. What is the conduct we should pursue towards our weaker allies? should that weakness beget in us? A spirit of moderation, kindness, and regard. If they err, we should forgive them. any questions of dispute arise between us depending on the doubtful construction of treaties, we can afford that the construction shall be given in their favour. There is only one mode by which you will attach the natives of India to your Government, and that is, by pursuing a policy which is calculated to conciliate their affections. I am quite satisfied that it is upon this foundation alone that the stability of our empire in India must depend. It is upon these grounds that I shall move the resolution which is now before the Court for its adoption. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Lewin.—I rise to second the motion. I consider the case a very simple one, and that the whole of the arguments lie, as it were, in a nutshell. The three points which are involved in the question respecting the right to the sovereignty of Sattara are, first, as to the right by adoption; secondly, as to the right of the heir general; and thirdly, as to the right by the express terms of the treaty. Now, with regard to the right under the treaty, I consider my honourable and learned friend has entirely disposed of that point. Then, as respects the title of the present claimant as "heir general," I think every person who is acquainted with the facts of the case must feel that it is impossible to dispute the right of succession on that ground. Lastly, with regard to the right of the present claimant by adoption, it is equally impossible to doubt that the late rajah had, by the Hindoo law, a perfect right to adopt any person to succeed him in his sovereignty, and that the present heir general was adopted by him. If these three points be established, then it would clearly be an act of violence, which nothing could justify, if the East-India Company should alienate the territories of the Rajah of Sattara and attach them to their own dominions in India.

The Chairman.—It is not my intention to enter into a discussion of the question which has been introduced, or to reply to the statements and arguments which have been advanced by the hon. proprietor. When the proper time shall arrive, I shall be prepared to express my opinion; but, in point of fact, I am not prepared to do so now. The requisite papers and despatches prepared to do so now. The requisite papers and despatches have, since the last general meeting, arrived from India, and the question is now sub judice. It is at this moment under consideration in the Court of Directors, who are prepared to do everything that is right and proper on their part. In the motion which I am now about to make, and which I hope the Court will adopt, I am acting in consistency with the express and well-known decisions of this Court on several occasions, that you will not interfere with the executive. (Hear, hear.) I have only further to say, that it is no longer than two or three months ago that a motion was made in substance precisely the same as that now before the Court. Under these circumstances, I am quite sure I shall have the sanction of the Court of Proprietors in adopting the same course which was then taken, - moving the adjournment of the Court. I therefore move that this Court do now adjourn.

The Deputy-Chairman.—I rise to second the amendment. It is quite impossible for the Court of Directors to listen to this motion without surrendering their own proper functions. The subject is at this moment on the table of the Court of Directors; when they have passed an opinion upon it, then of course it may be taken up by the Court of Proprietors.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee wished to know whether it was the intention of the Chairman to adjourn the Special Court only, or the Special and Quarterly General Court together?

The Chairman replied, that the effect of this amendment, if carried, would be to postpone the Quarterly General Court till the next quarterly meeting.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee thought that this was the most extraordinary proceeding he had ever heard of in his life.

The Chairman maintained that it was according to custom and precedent; when a motion for adjournment was carried, it put an end to all further business.

Mr. Lewin doubted the correctness of the opinion of the Chairman. It appeared to him to be a manœuvre of the Court of Directors to get rid of the discussion of the other questions.

The Chairman.—The fault is not mine. I have no objection to the motions of the hon. proprietor (Mr. Lewin) being brought on. I think I am prepared with an answer to every one of them, but he cannot proceed now, unless the motion for adjournment is negatived. He may bring them forward at the next general Court, or, if he thinks fit, he may, with eight other proprietors, call a special Court. But I appeal to the Court whether the hon. proprietor has a right to accuse the Court of Directors of practising a manœuvre in moving the adjournment? (Hear, hear.) However I may regret the effect of that motion, I cannot depart from precedent, or from the usage and custom of this Court. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Clarke. - The reasons the Chairman has assigned for the adjournment do not appear to me at all satisfactory. It is stated that, in bringing forward this motion, the hon. proprietor is interfering with your executive capacity while you are now considering the subject, and you propose an adjournment until you have perfected your arrangements, and have come to a decision upon it. Now, if those arrangements had already been made, and your decision given, there would not have been the slightest interference. Therefore, until the Court of Directors have decided upon this very important question,-important because it involves the character of their Government for good faith, - all we have to do is to wait, and there is an end of the whole question, without the necessity of an adjournment. But I do, with submission to the Chairman, say that it would have been better if he had given way a little, and, with the view of preventing any further discussion upon the main question, he had, instead of moving the adjournment of the Court, proposed that the present question should have been adjourned. This would have been adopting a middle course. I must say that I consider it would be but paying a proper deference to, and displaying a spirit of conciliation towards, the opinion of a great many proprietors who take a great interest in the Sattara question, not to allow that subject to be extinguished without discussion, considering that it involves the question of the cession of that territory. Such a discussion could not interfere with the executive authority of the Court; and, if their decision would bear full discussion, I am quite sure nothing would be lost by it. The Court of Directors can claim no right of control over the opinions of individual proprietors, except a moral control, and I should have thought they would have been glad to hear what are the sentiments and views of the proprietors upon a subject which has so long harassed the Court,—infinitely too long, in my humble opinion. As to the word "manœuvre," it was an improper term, and no doubt escaped unwittingly from the hon. proprietor. I deplore the bringing gentlemen here upon other questions, at great personal inconvenience, and then not allowing the business to proceed. I for one oppose the question of adjournment.

A Proprietor wished to make a suggestion. The motion of the Chairman was merely an amendment upon the original motion; if, then, the mover and seconder of the motion would withdraw it, the amendment would necessarily fall to the ground, and then the other business might be brought forward.

The Chairman stated, that if the resolution were withdrawn, he would have no objection to withdraw the amendment, and allow the business of the general Court to proceed. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee felt somewhat surprised at what he confessed he frequently had great difficulty in ravelling out,-the practice of the India House. By their Act of Parliament the proprietors were to have four different meetings in the year, but by adopting the course the Chairman had followed that day, they would reduce them to three. It was also a new doctrine to him (Mr. Serjeant Gaselee), that, by fixing a special Court for the day for which previous notice had been given of the general Court,-by fixing that day, in preference to all others (for the special Court might have been appointed for the yesterday, the morrow, or any other day),-they could, by simply moving an amendment of adjournment, get rid of the whole business of the general Court, as well as the special Court. If the Directors had the power of adopting such a course as that, they would be making the proprietary body more ridiculous and absurd in their powers than they had hitherto been. (Cries of "hear, hear.") He denied the power of the Chairman to adjourn the general Court; he might get rid of the special Court by that means, but not the general Court. Why, there was the Directors' own notice staring them in the face! So much for the power of the Court; and now as to its policy. He considered it was not treating the Court with respect, when such an unprecedented subject was brought forward, for the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman not to meet it on its own merits, but by a motion for an adjournment. He (Mr. Serjeant Gaselee) was aware that the Chairman was conscious that he had a majority present to support him, and as long as the Court was constituted as it was, -so long as there was the influence of patronage to be exercised by the Directors, - it would always be so. ("Oh, oh!" from Mr. Fielder). He thought people ought to speak out upon such subjects. It was in consequence of the mealy-mouthedness of the proprietors that that Court had become what it was. Why were the Directors to be permitted to stifle discussion in that Court? He did not say they did wrong in opposing this motion; probably they did right, though it would be a splendid exception if they did so. (Laughter.) He knew how these things were managed, just as well as though he had been behind the scenes. He had come unprepared to vote one way or the other. He had, when he felt it his duty, opposed the course taken by the advocates of the rajah, and was prepared to do so again, when he believed them wrong; but he had been convinced by the arguments in favour of the resolution, and had it gone to a vote he would have supported it. The Directors said they had the matter under consideration,—and he had great faith in the Directors,—but he thought that a little pressure, a little light from without, would do them good; for without that he was sure the question would never come before the Court. It appeared that there was at the present time an adopted heir and a collateral heir to the Sattara throne, and the whole thing certainly seemed to be a question of justice against power. He hoped the Court would meet the motion for adjournment with a flat denial. (Cheers.)

Mr. Weeding thought that, if the hon, gentleman who had just spoken had looked calmly at the question, he would have spared many of his remarks. The motion for adjournment did not preclude the gentlemen present from entering largely into the question which had been brought before the Court. Therefore, the Court had not been precluded by the course adopted from hearing and judging of what would otherwise have been brought forward. He (Mr. Weeding) agreed with the position of the Chairman, that the question had been already decided by the Court some time ago, when the Court refused to sanction it; the present was, therefore, an attempt to come indirectly to the same conclusion. For himself, he did not sacrifice, nor call upon the gentlemen about him to sacrifice, any of his rights as a proprietor, by leaving the question to be decided by the Court of Directors. They had before them the judgments of men better versed in the affairs of India than the Court of Proprietors, and were, therefore, in a position to come to a sounder conclusion. For his own part, he would say that it would be for the interest of the people of India that the Company's sway should extend of the people of India that the Company's away should extend over those principalities; that security, peace, and prosperity were more likely to be obtained for the mass of the people of that country, and their progress in civilization would be better secured, by the extension of the British arms and the administration of British justice; and, therefore, he hoped that, if the Directors could do it without violating justice, they would assume the sovereignty of Sattura. Mr. Fielder thought that, if any blame attached with reference to the proceedings of the Court that day, it did not attach to the Court of Directors, but to the nine gentlemen who had made that Court special; for, by so doing, they had excluded other business; whereas, if they had made the Court "special and general," they would have allowed other business to have been transacted. What Mr Lewis had said was all very true, supposing the Rajah of Sattara had been an independent prince; but he (Mr. Fielder) denied that he was an independent prince.

With regard to the word "heirs," that prince might have heirs with regard to the word neits, that prince might have the to his private property, but not to the rajahship of Sattara, which was a very different thing. The word "successors" did not mean any one allied by blood, but actually in possession; whether by might or right, it was the same thing. The whole of the ther by might or right, it was the same thing. rajahship had fallen into the hands of the Company, to whom it belonged, and they could do with it as they thought right. He thought that the Court would do wisely in leaving the question at present in the hands of the Directors, more especially when the Chairman had pledged himself that they would give it their most serious consideration.

General Briggs said,-I had not proposed to speak on this question, but as it has been met by a motion for adjournment, I shall say a few words upon the treaty with the Rajah of Sattara. It has been said that the rajah is not an independent prince. It is distinctly stated in Mr. Elphinstone's report to the Governor-General that he proposed to give an independent sovereignty to the Rujah of Sattara, and used the expression, "restoring him to his rights." The treaty was made and ratified more than a year afterwards, when Sattara was taken, the rajah being still in the Peishwa's hands, by General (afterwards Sir Lionel) Smith. A proclamation was thereupon issued in the name of the Rajah of Sattara, as the sovereign of the country. Before any treaty was formed with him, therefore, he was recognised by Sir Lionel Smith, by order of Mr. Elphinstone, as a soveteign prince, as the Rajah of Sattara. It was as an independent sovereign that you treated with him in every instance. You received from him an ambassador plenipotentiary to make the treaty. His minister, Wittul Punt, treated with you; it was not with the 1ajah, but the ambassador of the rajah, that the treaty was made, -his minister, Wittul Punt, in his name, on the one hand, and Capt. Grant, in the name of the British Government, on the other. That treaty, made on the 25th September, 1819, was ratified by the Governor-General in Council on the 29th November of the same year. In the first article of that treaty it is stated that "the British Government agrees to cede in perpetual sovereignty to the Rajah of Sattara, his heirs and successors, the districts specified in the amended schedule." Now, my hon friend who moved this motion has adverted to the words in that article in the original. The word "heirs," as he stated truly, is "furzund," signifying son; "warris," signifying heir direct, or collateral, and "koyan mookan," signifying a representative. I pledge and "koyan mookam," signifying a representative. I pledge myself, as an Oriental scholar, that the word "koyan mookam" signifies representative. It is a word constantly made use of when a father during his lifetime delegates to his son or to a minister the full power which he himself possessed; such delegate or representative is called "koyan mookam." It may also be applied to heirs adopted by Hindoos; and, therefore, the literal translation of that article would have been "lineal descendants, collateral descendants, and adopted children:" that ought to have been the translation of the words which are here rendered "heirs and successors." But it is not necessary to dispute the English translation, because the word successors" embraces all. This "koyan mookam" signifies very much the same as our English expression, "executors, administrators, and assigns;" or (as it is suggested to me) locum tenens. Of course, it never could have been contemplated that, when a perpetual sovereignty was granted, like that of Sattara, in the course of a few years, at a time when there was a legal heir living, and an adopted child also, the British Government should resume the territory. What is the meaning of "perpesnould resume the territory. What is the meaning of perpotual sovereignty?" Why, it was intended that the territory guaranteed by law to him (the rajah restored to his sovereign power) should be secured to him and his heirs for ever. It never was contemplated that the country should be resumed. was contemplated that the country about the Hindoo law and ex-Rajah of Sattara adopted, according to the Hindoo law and practice, with the cognizance of the British Government, the nearest relative of his family. I hold in my hand a pedigree, which I have brought with me from India, obtained by me from the records of the house of Sattara, while Resident at the Court.

And here it will be seen that Babji was the common ancestor; that he had two sons, Vittoji and Maloji. From the son Maloji came Shahji, and one of his sons, Sivaji, was the first Rajah of Sattara, while another son, Venkoji, became Rajah of Tanjore. Subsequently, the second son of Sivaji became Rajah of Colapoor.

Three independent sovereigns arose from the line of Maloji. Maloji had, as I have stated, a brother named Vittoji. had eight children; the eldest child died without issue; from the second son, Keloji, there was in the fourth degree a child adopted by the house of Sattara, who was entitled Shahu II., the father of the two brothers who afterwards filled the throne. The Rajahs of Tanjore have been in the habit of adopting children from the lines of Mumbaji and Trimbucji, the sixth and seventh sons of Vittoji, while the Rajah of Colapoor have adopted from another son of Vittoji. The descendants of the house of Maloji, therefore, have for many generations been in the habit of adopting children from the line Vittoji, the younger brother of Maloji, from whom came the houses of Sattara, Tanjore, and Colapoor. The late Rajah of Sattara, Pertara, Tanjore, and Colapoor. The late Rajah of Sattara, Pertarb Shean, who was dethroned, and his brother, Appa Sahib, who was subsequently enthroned by the British Government, died without direct issue. But there was a collateral heir, Trimbucji, who was the grand nephew of the late rajah, a lineal descendant, through the male line, of Vittoji, the brother of the ancestors of the first Rajah of Sattara. He is, therefore, the nearest surviving heir to that family. But there is another more important question before us,—an infringement upon the custom, as I venture to say it is, in the sentiment maintained on the other side, that the princes of India have no right to adopt children without asking the sanction of the Governor-General. That is a most dangerous principle to set forth. The government of Gualior is an wielded by the third successive adopted heir of the house of Sindia. The Rajah of Tanjore is an adopted heir. The Rajah of Sattara, the father of the two late Rajahs of Sattara, was himself, as you have heard, an adopted heir. Almost all the Hindoo sovereigns of India are adopted children; and are you now going to assume the principle, that the adopted children of Hindoos shall not succeed to the rights and property of those adopting them? The Government of British India, it appears, now assumes to be lord paramount of India. I deny the fact. (Hear.)
Its power is paramount, but that does not constitute a lord
paramount. The Government of India did not confer sovereignty on the princes of the house of Sattara, which you are now seeking to put an end to. It is almost the oldest dynasty in India, established before our time. You did not create a new sovereign in the Rajah of Sattara in 1819. You restored him to his power and his possessions, it is true, as Mr. Elphinstone stated, but established no new sovereignty. ing upon this question of adoption, I will state to the Court the convenience of the principle as applicable to India. The Hindoo land and personal property is, by law, equally divisible amongst the sons of the person dying, and, by the same law, it would be equally divided on the death of an individual without children amongst all the collateral heirs; but to prevent this division, and, in fact, the extinction of the integrity of an estate, a person is permitted to adopt out of the collateral heirs one person to inherit the whole property. Not only is he permitted to do so during his lifetime, but his widow is bound to do so after his death, because a young man in the prime of life may be suddenly cut off by accident or otherwise, without having adopted an heir; and in such case, or in any case, as I have stated, the widow is required to adopt, in order to prevent the estate being frittered away amongst collateral relations, or subjected to ruin in legal litigation. And a very convenient thing this custom of adoption is. But, if you are to do away with the right of adoption with respect to the princes of India, the next question will be, where ther the estates which you have conferred on officers or other individuals for services, should be allowed to pass by adoption or You are here treading on most delicate ground. power in India has been obtained through the instrumentality of your native armies; it has been maintained by the general opinion of your justice throughout the country, aided by the attachment of the country of the coun ment of that army. Let the fidelity of that army be once shaken, and your power is gone. You have now an army of 250,000 native soldiers in India to support your power, and it is on the fidelity of those troops that you stand or fall. You may rely on it, if you infringe the institutions of the people of India, that that army will sympathise with them. I oppose, therefore, this adjournment. I think the Directors should be obliged to us for warning them and affording them the benefit of the experience of those who, like me, have been so long in that country, and which enables me to speak with some degree of confidence upon such a question.

Col. Dickinson said, the innocence or guilt of the late ex-Rajah of Sattara, the competency of himself or of his brother, the late rajah, to adopt an heir to the sovereignty without the previous consent of the British Government, are not, in my humble opinion, the topics which we are called upon to discuss; but as the question before the Court is one in the decision of which the honour of our Indian Government is not less deeply involved. I conceive it due to this Court, and to all native states so circumstanced as that of Sattara, that the hon. Chairman, or one of his colleagues, should be requested to make known to us the grounds on which it is contended that the sovereignty of the late Rajah Appa Sahib lapses to the British Government. The question to be considered is not the expediency or otherwise of such annexation, founded on political or financial considerations; it is one founded on good faith and the plain interpretation of existing treaties; and to justify such sequestration of a nation's rights, it becomes the bounden duty of the Indian Government to satisfy the public that a measure so rarely if ever resorted to, and so opposed to the feelings and interests of all classes of the Sattara state, is in accordance with the spirit and provisions of the existing treaty; and if there be any doubts on this all-essential point, these might be easily and effectually cleared up by a reference to the eminent statesman, in accordance with whose suggestions the sovereignty of Sattara was recognised and remodelled, and in conformity with whose benignant views the treaty of 1819 was framed. Should, however, the Indian authorities be unwilling to give the Sattara state the benefit of an appeal to so impartial and enlightened an umpire, it is of importance to bear in mind that in the treaty which was also drawn up by Mr. Elphinstone, about the same time, with the contiguous state of Colabah, Article 4th expressly provides for the right of the British Government to confer investiture on the chief on any vacancy of the musuud; the omission of which, or of any thing of a like import, in the treaties of 1819 and 1839, is perhaps the strongest evidence that can be adduced to justify a valid fact, that the Sattara state is exempted from all interference of the British Government as regards succession, unless that takes place in a manner at variance with the first article of the treaty of 1819, which, in failure of lineal, provides most unequivocally, in my opinion, for collateral descent.

Mr. Clarke said it was quite clear that the desire of the Court was, that the treaty made with the Rajah of Sattara in 1819, and that subsequently made with his brother, should be effectually carried out. If there was a doubt about the construction of the treaty, let them refer the question to Mr. Mountstuart Elphinstone, who understood all its bearings. All that was wanted, both by the hon. Proprietors and the Court of Directors, was to establish the character of the Company for good faith throughout

Mr. Lewis most readily concurred in the views expressed by Mr. Clarke with regard to the motion he (Mr. Lewis) had made. He admitted that the Chairman had, of course, a right, as he had done on former occasions, to move an amendment of adjournment thereupon; but he denied that they could do so upon the ground alleged, namely, that it was the same motion which had been made before. When the question was before the Court on the previous occasion, the Chairman himself stated that the Directors were then waiting for information from India, and when that information had been received it would be communicated to the Proprietors. He must enter his protest against the effect of the adjournment. It appeared to him perfectly clear that they had no right to get rid of the general Court along with the special Court, for by the Act of Parliament they were obliged to hold four general quarterly Courts for the despatch of business. He thought that the opinion of their legal adviser ought to be taken upon the subject. (Hear.)

The Chairman said that the hon. Proprietor must have forgotten the debate which took place in July, when the resolution which was submitted to the Court was, that the Company having entered into a treaty with Pertaub Shean, the Rajah of Sattara, on the 25th of September, 1819, and ceded the territory to him, his heirs, and successors, they could not take possession of the territory without a breach of good faith. In substance, therefore, he thought the present motion was precisely the same. He had only to say, that he thought it was not right that there should be a discussion, until the Court of Directors had come to some decision upon the subject. He was quite sure it would receive every attention, and would be discussed at great length, by the Court of Directors. It was well known that there was considerable difference of opinion among the members of the Court of Directors on the subject, but they were all anxious not to dispose of it without coming to a proper deci-The adjournment of the Court, if it were adjourned, would be the act of the Proprietors themselves, and not that of the Directors.

The question was then put.

Mr. Scrj. Gaselee asked whether the notes of the trial of Sir Wm. Young were ready to be laid before the Court of Proprietors?

The Chairman. - That case has not been decided yet: there has been no judgment given.

Mr. Serj. Gaselee .- That is no reason why the notes should not be produced.

Mr. Lewis. - The motion for adjournment is an amendment upon my motion, and I now propose to withdraw my motion. (No, no.)

Mr. Fielder .- The question has been put. (Loud cries of " question " and " divide.")

Mr. Lewis. - If I am not allowed to withdraw my motion, I shall divide.

The Court then divided, when the numbers were, For the adjournment..... 45 Against it ...... 17 Majority ..... 28

CULTIVATION OF COTTON IN INDIA.

The Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, appointed last Session to inquire into the growth of cotton in India, has been published, with the minutes of evidence, forming a very large volume. The Committee, after adverting to the inferior quality of the cotton grown by the natives of India, and their neglect in the processes of gathering, cleaning, storing, and transmitting it, and stating that there exists a strong conviction that the cultivation of the plant may be greatly extended, and its quality so much improved, as to enable it to stand a fair competition with that of the United States of America, say :-

"The results of the experiments made for the improvement of the cultivation and cleaning of indigenous cotton, and for the introduction of superior descriptions from the United States and other cotton-producing countries, may be thus shortly stated:—It has been clearly established, that not only does the American plant grown in India produce a staple larger, and therefore better calculated for the European manufacturer, but that it can be grown on land of a poorer description than the native cotton, and is therefore liable to a lower rate of assessment; that the produce per acre is considerably larger, and that the proportion of wool to seed is greater. In the presidency of Bengal, and in the N.W. Provinces, no success has been obtained in cultivating the American cotton, and the improvements in cleaning the indigenous variety have not led to any result of importance. In the great cotton district of Broach, under Bombay, it does not appear that much has been effected beyond attaining a greater degree of clearness, by the introduction of saw-gins. The cultivation of American cotton has been introduced with perfect success into the Southern Mahratta country, under Bombay, and the province of Coimbatore, under Madras. The cotton produced from New Orleans seed in Dharwar has been pronounced equal to fair American, and the natives have readily entered on the cultivation of American cotton in that district, where 25,000 acres were sown last year with New Orleans seed. The province of Coimbatore appears still better suited, in soil and climate, to the cultivation of New Orleans cotton than the Southern Mahratta country; the produce of that province being pronounced superior in quality to that grown in the Dharwar district."

While the result of these experiments has satisfied the Committee of the power of India to supply England with cotton of a very improved quality and to an indefinite extent, they feel bound to state that they do not expect that by these means alone its cultiva-tion will be greatly extended or its quality improved. They are of opinion that the subject must be taken up by men of capital and enterprise, and that it is chiefly, if not solely, to British capital and intelligence that any permanent improvement must be looked for in the quality or the increase of production.'

The Committee, in considering whether any peculiar obstacles exist to account for the stationary condition of the cotton cultivation, remark, that it appears that the condition of the cultivating population of India is one of extreme poverty; that they are indebted to the money-lender or banker of the village for the means wherewith to procure seed, and to carry on the most imperfect cultivation; and that they give him security for his loan on the growing crops, which, at maturity, they dispose of to him at prices regulated by his will, rather than the demands of the market. The rate of interest said to be paid by the ryots is often 40 and 50 per cent., and even higher.

With respect to the Government demand, without pronouncing any decided opinion upon the much-vexed question regarding its collection in the shape of rent, the Committee agree with the principles laid down in a despatch of the Court of Directors to the Government of India, dated 12th April, 1837,-namely, that moderation in the Government demand, and certainty as to the amount of the tenure, constitute the basis of a sound settlement of assessment on land in India; and they commend the abandonment of the system of assessing land according to the nature of the produce, and the substitution of a fixed assessment with reference to the productive power or capability of the land; in other words, with reference to the rent which, under ordinary circumstances, the cultivator would be able to pay, leaving him at liberty to produce what articles he may find most profitable.

The Committee, with reference to the means of internal com-munication, state that, with scarcely an exception, throughout India, they are totally inadequate for the requisites of commerce; in consequence of which, traffic is conducted at an enormous cost of money, time, and labour. They approve of the suggestion that, if the ordinary revenue be really insufficient to defray the cost of road-making, to levy tolls on the new roads; and they state that the witnesses are unanimous in urging the formation of railways in India. In conclusion, the Committee express their opinion that, "under the continued encouragement now afforded by the Government of India, and by taking full advantage of all the resources which are still within reach, there may eventually be opened to the manufacturers of this country a large and regular supply of cotton of a quality largely consumed by the British manufacturers."

LAW.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DEC. 20.

In the Bankruptcy of C. E. Newcomen. — The bankruptcy Charles Edward Newcomen, was a member of the firm of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., of Austinfriars, East-India merchants. He became a bankrupt on his own petition. The fiat is dated September 1, 1848. This was the certificate meeting.

The balance-sheet contains the following items: - Creditors. 88l.; capital, 1,062l.; amount due me by Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, at the time I retired from the firm, 36,400l.; profits, 4,004l.; shares in the East-India Railway, 9l. 10s.; expenses, 2,322l.; losses, 2,823l.

Mr. James said he attended on behalf of the Union Bank of Calcutta, to oppose the granting of the certificate. It appeared that the bankrupt had for some years been a member of the firm of Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, the East-India correspondents of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. He became a member of the latter firm in January, 1847. A considerable portion of the funds and of money raised upon the credit of the Union Bank was allocated to the use of firms now insolvent, which had partners in the direction of the bank, and two firms alone received 600,000L, one of which was Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta. On Dec. 31st, 1817, Cockerell and Co. stood in the bank books as debtors to the amount of 230,000l., nearly 130,000l. of which was unsecured. It was also alleged that the bank had a further claim for 122,700l. upon bills discounted. At the last examination-meeting, two claims, amounting together to 352,000%, were sought to be established against the bankrupt's estate by the bank, but they were not substantiated. The ground of opposition to the certificate arose in this way: - The Union Bank has for several years been in the habit of issuing paper known in the Calcutta money-market as bank post-bills. In June, 1847, Mr. W. P. Grant, then Master in Equity of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, and a director of the finance committee of the Union Bank, in order to assist the bank with ready money, made the following arrangement with Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, and the secretary of the bank-that Mr. Grant should draw upon Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., for 40,000/. in the whole; that the draughts for this amount should be sold in the Calcutta moneymarket, collaterally secured by Union Bank post-bills, and that the purchase-money should be received by the bank; that the bank should undertake to put Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. in funds by satisfactory remittances to provide for Mr. Grant's draughts upon them before maturity, and that, as a collateral security for the performance of the last engagement, the bank's secretary should hand to Mr. Grant, and he should forward to Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. another set of bank post-bills for 45,000l. This arrangement having been concluded, Mr. Grant, on the 25th of June, 1847, drew upon Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., five bills at ten months' date, amounting together to 30.000L, which were (collaterally secured by bank post-bills) sold to Jardine and Co., of Calcutta, and the purchase-money was paid to the Union Bank, whose secretary thereupon gave Mr. Grant the promised engagement to provide for his draughts before maturity, and handed him another set of bank post-bills for 340,000 Co.'s Rs. in the whole. Mr. Grant, on the 25th of June, 1847, wrote to Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., informing them that he had drawn upon them for draughts (enumerated) to the extent of 30,000l., and adding, "as security for your acceptance of the above bills, I beg to hand you herewith postbills of the Union Bank of Calcutta for Rs. 340,000, being the equivalent of the same, 1s. 10d. exchange; and I also enclose a copy of a letter from the secretary of the Union Bank, undertaking on behalf of the bank that remittances shall be sent to you in due course, so as to prevent the possibility of your coming under cash advance on this account." The engagement referred to was enclosed. Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., of London, wrote to Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, undertaking the engagement. and stating that they had accepted the draughts in reliance that the Calcutta Bank would furnish them in due time with the necessary funds. In further pursuance of this arrangement, Mr. Grant, in July, 1847, drew upon Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., of London, eight bills at six months' sight for 10,000l. in the whole, which were sold (collaterally secured by bank post-bills) to Messrs. Kelsall, of Calcutta, and the purchase money was paid to the Union Bank, whose secretary gave Mr. Grant an engagement similar to the former, and handed him another set of bank post-bills for Rs. 110,000. Mr. Grant again wrote to Cockerell and Larpent as before, drawing upon them to the extent of 10,0001., and enclosing as security Union Bank post-bills to the amount of Rs. 110,000. The learned counsel charged the bankrupt, as a member of the firm of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., with having negotiated the largest portion of the bank post-bills forwarded to them by Mr. Grant as collateral security for his draughts, and stated that it had been ascertained that all such bills were negotiated in September, 1847, the very month in which they stopped payment. The effect of such negotiation was to make the Union Bank of Calcutta liable both to the holders of Cockerell, Larpent, and Co.'s acceptances (in respect of their being collaterally secured to the purchasers, Messrs. Jardine and Messrs. Kelsall, by post-bills), and to the English holders of the post-bills sent home to Cockerell, Larpent, and The bank having received consideration only for the postbills issued in Culcutta, the effect of the negotiation by Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. was a loss to the bank of 45,000l. learned gentleman complained that the bankrupt firm of which Mr. Newcomen was a member had appropriated the proceeds of those bills to their own purposes, instead of meeting the acceptances to which they were applicable, and that they had done so in violation of Mr. Grant's instructions, which stated that "when the transaction is closed by your receipt of satisfactory remittances from this, I should feel obliged by your returning the bills Cockerell, Larpent, and Co. had by letter engaged to hold the bills "as collateral security, to be returned to you on receipt of remittances for that amount."

[In justice to Messrs. Cockerell, Larpent, and Co., we quote the following extracts from two of their letters-one to Mr. Grant and the other to Cockerell and Co., of Calcutta, both dated September 7, 1847:-

"Aware that no positive permission is given to negotiate these bills, although we consider, from the circumstances of the case and the communications received from Messrs. Cockerell and Co., that we are authorized to adopt such a course, we have written fully to those gentlemen upon the subject, and have given them such instructions as to the rate of exchange, and the aid they may afford in payment of the said bills, if required, on our account, as will, we payment of the sand ones, it required, on our account, as will, we trust, be satisfactory to you and to the Union Bank, and prevent any inconvenience to either party. As the communication between the two countries is now so frequent and rapid, we wish operations upon so large a scale and of so unusual a character not to be undertaken without previous communication with us, and upon our assent being given; otherwise we are placed in the very unpleasant predicament of having to choose between refusing bills drawn upon us by parties like yourself, or of apparently going beyond the letter of our parties like yoursell, or of apparently going ocyond the letter of our instructions. The evils of the former preponderating, in our judgment, we trust that this matter will be satisfactorily arranged between you and our friends, Messrs. Cockerell and Co." The above letter is addressed to Mr. Grant. The letter of which the following is an extract is addressed to Messrs. Cockerell:—"As a security Bank of Calcutta are useless, and we know that the Union Bank has overdrawn its account largely with Glyn and Co., and that although the remittances per Bombay mail were considerable, the bills were also large, and they told me this morning that if the account was not put square, they (Glyn and Co.) should be put to the alternative of refusing the bills of the Union Bank, and, indeed were shifted determined by the statement of the contraction of the Union Bank, and, indeed were shifted attentions. deed, were chiefly deterred from such a course by knowing the engagement of your house and ours with that concern. Under these circumstances, we have no alternative but either to refuse acceptance or negotiate the said Union post-bills. We have reluctantly adopted the latter course, and sold them to the amount of 410,000 rupees."]

The bankrupt was examined. He was no party to the transaction in question, and knew nothing whatever of it until it had been concluded, when he expressed his disapproval of it. The transaction was conducted and concluded solely by the senior partners, Sir George Larpent and Mr. Cockerell. When the bills were received, they were put into the strong box, of which he never had the key. Believed the bills so received from India were disposed of in the month in which the house stopped payment, and that some were disposed of on the 24th of September. The house stopped payment on the 26th of September. not believe that the stoppage was in contemplation on or before the 24rh. There was considerable difficulty no doubt, and a question rose as to whether or no the house would be able to go on.

Mr. James said, he did not feel bound to press the matter any further against Mr. Newcomen, to whom it appeared there was no blame due.

Commissioner Fonblanque.—I quite agree with you—Res inter alios. As far as the balance-sheet is concerned, I have seldom seen a more satisfactory case. I feel pleasure, Mr. Newcomen, in granting to you your certificate.

DEC. 26.

In the matter of John Johnson.-The bankrupt carried on business in copartnership with Joseph Windle Cole, in Great Winchester Street. Mr. Cole obtained his certificate some months ago, during the present bankrupt's absence in India, with which country they chiefly traded. Mr. Johnson is a native of Calcutta, and for some years carried on a prosperous business in India. Mr. Cole was a confidential clerk in the employ of Messrs, Forbes, large East-India merchants. Cole returned from Bombay in the beginning of 1846, when Johnson took him into partnership with him. Cole had no capital. Johnson puts down his capital at that period at 13,0001., or thereabouts. Johnson went to India, soon after the formation of the partnership, in order to manage the business of the concern there. The house stopped payment during the crisis at the close of 1847. They traded under the designation of "Johnson, Cole, and Co." The flat was issued on the petition of the bankrupt; it bears date May 6, 1848.

The following are the main items of the joint balance-sheet of Johnson and Cole :- On the debtor sidecreditors on open accounts, 3,600*l.*; bills payable, 115,211*l.*; bills payable with securities attached, 13,329*l.*; liabilities on bills receivable, 95,005l.; ditto with securities attached, 2,700l.; liabilities on rupee bills receivable, 19,8621.; ditto with securities attached, 3.0144.; profit, 10,000l. And on the credit side—good debts, 6,957l.; doubtful ditto, 26,434l.; bad ditto, 3,188l.; debts due by claimants, 19,595l.; debts due by ditto, but doubtful if they hold the bills, 22,351*L*; debts due to the holders of bills receivable, 74,716*L*; ditto with security attached, 2,700*L*; ditto to holders of prize bills, with security attached, 3,014*L*; ditto to holders of bills payable with ditto, 13,329*L*; expenses, 8,219*L*;

Mr. Roy, for the assignees, said,—the liabilities were immense, the assets extremely small, and the conduct of the bankrupt, as a trader, in their opinion, improper. The first item that must strike the Commissioner was the enormous amount of liabilities (262,000%), although the partnership only commenced on the 1st of January, 1846, and ended in November, 1847. The assets consisted, in a great measure, of debts due to the estate; and the bankrupt might leave the country, and give his creditors no further assistance in the collection of such debts. The bankrupt had begun with only 13,000L capital, and ended, after eighteen months, with 262,540l. on the debit side of his balance-sheet. He had taken 52,000l. out of the joint concern to pay his own old debts. It was a most mischievous course of trading. There was another singular feature in this case. The bankrupt had been, with Mr. Lackersteen (of the firm of Lackersteen and Crake), engaged in bill transactions to a large amount,-showing, at least, the utter recklessness of Johnson. Some of these bills were drawn in India, with blanks for the date and amount, and filled up in London, and the bankrupt admitted that he had accepted those bills, although they purported to be made in London, whereas he knew they were made in Calcutta. But some of those bills were in every sense, even to the signature, made in London, although purporting to be made in Calcutta. the Court would not sanction such a proceeding. He admitted that the books of the bankrupt were generally well kept; but in one respect there was a most culpable error, for the bankrupt's clerk had admitted that he had entered those London-made bills in the bill-book under the head of "Receipt of advice" from Calcutta, although they were never advised at all. Witnesses having been examined in support of the above

Mr. Lawrance addressed the Court on behalf of the bankrupt. The bills in question were good and legal bills, and the remitting of bills from India to this country with blanks to be filled up here was in accordance with the custom of the East-India trade. Neither the drawer nor the acceptor had repudiated any of the This was the state of the case :- Mr. Lackersteen carried on business in this city with Mr. Crake, under the firm of Lackersteen and Crake. Mr. Lackersteen's brothers had a house in Calcutta, and traded under the firm of Lackersteen, Brothers. It was the custom of the East-India houses to make advances upon good transshipped; but as, from the distance, many months must elapse between the purchase of the goods and their transshipment, it was necessary for the shipper to obtain advances upon the goods. Accordingly, Lackersteen, Brothers, made remittances to Lackersteen and Crake of bills blank in amount and date, trusting to the latter honestly to fill up the blanks according to the exigency. The bills having been accepted by Johnson, were discounted at a London banker's. There was nothing morally or legally wrong in all this. were bona fide bills, drawn, accepted, and negotiated in good faith, and nobody was deceived by them. It was true, Messrs. Johnson and Cole had failed; but their failure was not attributable either to recklessness or dishonesty. They were crushed in the terrible wreck of East-India houses in 1847, and could not have been expected to survive when such houses as Cockerell, Larpent, and Co.; Reid, Irving, and Co., and Barclay, Brothers, sank. Mr. Lawrance then read a list, from which it appeared that the bankrupt had bills upon the above-mentioned three houses and upon eleven other first-rate East-India houses to the amount of 126,921L, and these fourteen houses had failed for no less a sum than 3,816,413!. Surely, in such general misfortune, it was too bad to single out Mr. Johnson for punish-Mr. Johnson, as soon as he learned the embarrassment of his house, returned from India, and voluntarily placed himself at the discretion of this Court. It was said that the capital of the bankrupt was disproportionate to his liabilities; but, in point of fact, his capital depended upon the solveney of those first rates house with whom he dealt. He dealt, like others, upon confidence,-that upon which the prosperity of this country, as a trading country, was, in a great measure, based; and to say that he ought to be punished for so doing, was to say that confidence ought to cease in mercantile affairs. He had neither rashly speculated, nor been personally extravagant. His profits had been large, and but for the unfortunate occurrences which had taken place, and for which he was not answerable, his trading would, upon the whole, have been prosperous. For all the bills which Johnson had accepted he had received full value. No creditor came forward to say that he had been cheated or deceived. There had been no malversation of assets; no fraudulent representations. He felt sure that the Court would not for one day delay the certificate.

Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque wished to know something about the custom of the East-India trade in respect to the transmission of bills partly in blank and filled up in London.

Mr. Roy denied that there was any such custom, and Mr. Lawrance positively affirmed that such was the custom.

The Commissioner said, it struck him as being a very irregular practice. But for the objections arising out of those bill transactions, there would be very little difficulty in dealing with the case, for there were no charges of undue speculation, or fraud, or concealment. The bankrupt's house had fallen in a storm which had crushed many stronger ones. There were many other me-ritorious features in his case. The official assignee reported most favourably of the mode in which the books were kept, and his personal expenses had been most moderate. Therefore, had the case been divested of those bill transactions, the certificate would not have been for a moment delayed. In this respect, however, his conduct was irregular, for it was clear that he had accepted those bills, knowing them to have been drawn in London, although they purported to be drawn in Calcutta; and in one instance a bill of this sort was accepted by Johnson which he knew to have been made, in every sense of the word, even to the signature, in London. But, after all, the bills, as appeared from the report of the official assignee, really represented value, and there was nothing fictitious in them. Ilad they been worthless, mere kite-flying transactions between two London houses, he would have felt it to be his duty to mark his decided disapprobation of such conduct; but, as it was not so, -as this was the only censurable part of the bankrupt's mercantile career, as there were many meritorious features in the case, and as he had been before the Court since May,-he would grant the certificate at once.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANNEXATION OF THE PUNJAB. - Nobody imagines that we covet the possession of the Punjab, although it would be altogether erroneous to consider it as a province geographically or historically separated from the empire of Hindostan. Its annexation would be popular in India, both from the natural preference with which all thoroughgoing measures are regarded, and from the increase of the two services which would necessarily follow. Nor can it be denied that any other expedient may be shown to want its amount of likelihood after the failure of the last. Except under such a sceptre as that of Runjeet, the Sikhs seem incapacitated for living at peace among themselves. If these tigers could be confined to their own jungle, we might, perhaps, shut our eyes to the bloodshed we have found it impracticable to prevent; but such anarchy is seldom circumscribed by its own frontiers, and we should infallibly have to fight on the Sutley the battles we declined on the Ravee. It is something beyond the ordinary necessity imposed on conquest which now impels us forward. Auribus tenemus lupum. We have got a powerful and ferocious beast in our clutches, which we have vainly tried to tame, and which we can neither conveniently hold, nor safely let go. Perhaps, a little respite may still be obtained by some ingenious modification of the conditions of our last protectorship; yet we can hardly persuade ourselves that the ultimate result will be anything but the advancement of the British frontier to that river which forms the historical boundary of India. That this consummation has been forced upon us, he

He was plain and unostentatious in his manner, yet dignified in his bearing and deportment; more remarkable for his good sense and just discernment, than for any very shining qualities, but superficial critics were misled by his modest and unobtrusive character in public, and gave him credit for fewer talents than he possessed.

INDIAN WHEAT.—A correspondent of the Times (Dec. 26), referring to the recent arrival of a cargo of wheat from Bombay, wheat, and to the practicability of importing it profitably into quality of some of these Indian wheats will probably surprise some of your readers. The kind called doodya is thought highly of, as grown near Patna, and the bread of Chunar and of Benares is celebrated among Indians for its whiteness, &c.; but it is only when articles of commerce are examined by experienced brokers that we are assured of their superiority over similar produce from other places. In June, 1847, two kinds of wheat, which were then four years old, were shown to an experienced corn-factor. He immediately pronounced them to be of fine quality, and valued the soft kind at 90s., and the hard at 80s., the quarter. Col. Ouseley, the officer in charge of the south-western frontier of Bengal, learning this, procured some fresh specimens of these wheats from the Nerbudda, and sent them to Calcutta, and thence by the overland route to England; but though reaped in January, they did not reach this before the end of September. Their superior quality has astonished many of the best judges. The white soft wheat was considered by some to be Talavera wheat, but to be unusually fine and of an especially excellent colour. It was valued in the beginning of November at from 66s. to 68s. per quarter, being the most valuable for a miller's purposes. This was several shillings above the highest-priced wheat then in the English market."

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COM-PANY have issued a circular announcing the completion of a contract with the Government for continuing the conveyance of the India and China mails between Southampton and Alexandria, the contract entered into on the 1st September, 1840, terminating on the 1st January, 1849. They state that, "since the presentation of their annual report on the 13th December, the Commissioners of the Admiralty have made a proposal, and an agreement has been entered into accordingly, for a continuation of the Company's contract for the conveyance of the India and China mails between Southampton and Alexandria, on the terms of an offer made to their lordships by the directors, in consequence of their lordships having opened the service to public tender in May last,—namely, for a period of not less than four years, and afterwards, until notice shall be given by either of the contracting parties to discontinue it: payment, 21,000l. for the first year, with an abatement of 500l. per annum for so long as the contract shall continue thereafter-a condition which the l directors consider the gradual development of the Company's passenger and commercial traffic will enable them to afford, and which will tend to insure the permanency of the connexion of the company with the service."

The Arabs illustrate the duty and advantage of the rich and poor rendering each other mutual assistance by the following apologue: Two men journeyed in company through a descrt; one had his eye sight, the other was blind; the former was weak, and had so many provisions that he could not carry them; the latter was strong, but without provisions. The former took the latter by the hand, and led him, while the blind man carried the seeing man's provisions upon his shoulder, and both, subsisting on them, reached the end of their journey safely.

The veritable gum kino is procured from the Shan states, and thence brought to Maulmain. It is the produce of the Pa-douk, a species of Pterocarpus, which grows plentifully in Assam.

The tenets of the fraternity called Ikhwan al Safa, or Brothers of Purity,' are chiefly explained by Arabian writers in parables. Thus, a physician came into a town in which the plague prevailed; he discovered a remedy, by which he cured a man. The physician is likened to a prophet. They hold that the body is to the soul what the egg is to the chicken; it must be destroyed before the soul can find life and freedom.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

Is India to have Railways? Fallacies of An East India Mer-chant exposed, in a Letter to Lieut. General Sir James Law Lushington, G. C.B., Chairman of the Hon. East-India Company. By an East-India Officer, a Shareholder in the East-Indian Railway Company. London. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

This pamphlet, which is a most unmerciful exposure of the proceedings of the directors of the East-Indian Railway Company, inflicts a lacerating castigation upon their advocate, "An East-India Merchant," whose "Letter to Lord John Russell," noticed in the Mail of November 2nd, the "East-India Officer" considers as "the semi-official manifesto" of the EastIndian Railway Company, on behalf of the directors and employés.

The "East India Officer" deals with the four propositions put forward by the partisan of the East Indian Railway Company in a straightforward manner.

First, "that that railway would not be profitable," which is the basis of the "Merchant's "attempt to prove that an absolute guarantee by the East-India Company of five per cent. was from the first considered essential. The "Officer," on the contrary, quotes from the first Report of the Directors of the Railway Company this statement: "without an increase in the existing traffic, a large dividend may be expected, and with that increase, a return much more remunerative than has hitherto been obtained upon any project of a similar character." He remarks, justly, that " if it were the secret belief of the railway authori-deceived us by inculcating an opposite doctrine."

Second, "that an absolute dividend was guaranteed and subsequently withdrawn." Upon this head, the "Officer," in our opinion, convicts the directors and their advocate of something very like a wilful suppressio veri, which kept the shareholders entirely in the dark, and of issuing to them a "garbled and most incorrect version" of the "Terms and Conditions" forwarded from the India House to the chairman of the Railway Company, in January, 1847. "It appears to me," observes the "Officer," upon this point, "that the very evidence cited by the 'East India Merchant,' stripped of his plausible gloss, cuts the ground from under his feet, and demonstrates to every candid mind that the Court never gave an absolute guarantee of five per cent., irrespective of several clearly specified contingencies, but merely granted a yearly contribution of five per cent. on the capital, during the construction of the railway, and to go in abatement of losses, should it prove an unsatisfactory investment; and it is important to remark that the knowledge of the actual facts of the case was derived not from the railway directors, but from a copy of the paper of 'Terms and Conditions' sent by the India House authorities in reply to the specific inquiries of the Secretary of the Stock Exchange, touching the nature of the guarantee, and after that officer had fruitlessly endenvoured to obtain the information from one of the railway companies."

Third, "that the appointment of the commission to India was stipulated for by the India House." Upon this point, again, the stipulations communicated by the India House to the Railway Company are one thing, and the interpretation given to the shareholders by the railway directors is another; and we are puzzled to understand how the latter can justify or palliate the change of the terms, involving so obvious a change of sense, and how they can excuse the profuse expenditure they incurred for this commission out of the slender funds at their actual disposal. Fourth, "that the withdrawal of the Bill of the East Indian Fourth, "that the withdrawal of the Bill of the East Indian Railway Company during the last session of Parliament prevented the shareholders completing the register." The "Officer" lets us into some of the secret objects meditated by this Bill, and whilst he most fully justifies the Court of Directors from any blame in requiring its withdrawal, as a condition of their reducing the Railway Company's deposit, he shows that the Bill, if passed, would have given the East Indian Railway Company the means of opposing in Parliament the endeavours of all other companies to obtain powers, not only for the introduction of railways, but almost any other modern improvement, into India.

Having disposed of all the "East India Merchant's" arguments, the "Officer" proceeds "to refresh his memory with a few additional facts and circumstances," which he appeared to have forgotten, overlooked, or too summarily dismissed. We content ourselves with stating one. He shows that, in order to raise the deposit required of £60,000, the directors borrowed £10,000 of bankers, "in anticipation of money on its way home from India," which was already forestalled for the Indian commission, and that the money was not raised, as the shareholders expected, by means of the £2 call in July, 1848, or, as announced by the secretary of the Railway Company, in his letter to the Court of Directors, "through the means of their registered proprietary." It appears that the last £2 call realized only £110, whereas £7,754 was reclaimed and withdrawn.

The prospects of this railway are concisely summed up in the following paragraph:—

"Nothing is more notorious, than that the shareholders in the East Indian Railway Company long ago wished to abandon the undertaking by forfeiture of their shares, and the nonpayment of their calls, and they are daily becoming more impatient of its perpetuation; but neither is anything more notorious than that the remaining directors and officials, in spite of this prevailing wish, persist in keeping the scheme in a sort of galvanic existence, so that it can neither live with profit nor die with dignity. Practically, I should imagine the shareholders are released from all obligation to prosecute the undertaking further, by the reduction of the capital, the mutilation of the project, the many apparent illegalities which have been committed in borrowing money, entering into contracts, and making calls before an Act of Parliament had been obtained, to say nothing of both the extent of the traffic and the nature of the guarantee having been misrepresented to the shareholders. For the directors, therefore, to enter into negotiations on the part of the shareholders, to carry into effect measures which cannot be enforced, is only to mock the authorities with whom such negotiations are held.

It is lamentable to find that an undertaking, which, under proper management, might have been made one of the pioneers of great local improvement in India, has been so misconducted; and the public owe thanks to the "East India Officer" who has exposed the real causes of so miserable a failure.

On the Deficiency of European Officers in the Army of India. By one of Themselves. London. Madden.

EUROPEAN officers being, according to the author of this pamphlet, "the very life and soul of the Indian army, and consequently the main prop of our Eastern empire," and the deficiency of European officers in the native army being declared by the same authority to be "notorious," the recent increase of the Bengal army in "men only" must be, by force of these data, an "impolitic measure." This "increase," however, is no more than a return to the status of 1847, when the numbers of "men" were reduced, without any reduction of "officers."

We are far from questioning the importance of European officers to the efficiency and fidelity of the native army; on the contrary, we are satisfied that they are the cement of that army; in the words of Col. Stannus, "on them depend the confidence and military spirit which animate the native soldiers far above those in the service of native powers." We are further of opinion that an increase of the number of those officers would be of great benefit to the service, and that "there cannot be a condition more unfavourable to military discipline" than that of allowing native corps to be without captains. But this is one of those cases in which a previous question arises, as to the expense. It is easy for a writer, who has probably a strong personal motive in advocating the increase of the number of officers in the native army, to complain of the Government's being "blind to its own interests," and "infatuated," of "its short-sighted and miserable policy," and of its "perilling an empire for the sake of a dividend," because it does not add a few hundred European officers to the native army; but where are the rupees to come from? The writer, "in order to meet a portion of the expense resulting from the increase of a large body of European officers," proposes that "a portion of the commissions should be paid for, on the scale in vogue at the Horse Guards;" that is, he wishes to import one of the worst parts of our military system at home into that of India, which would be ruined by it.

The comparison instituted between the proportion of officers in the royal regiments and in those of the East India Company is unfair, because the latter have, besides European officers, native commissioned officers. We are sorry to observe that, in order to get rid of this objection to his case, the writer, professing to be an officer of the Indian army, has ventured directly to disparage the native commissioned officers, whom he represents as "generally incompetent to discharge their duty," and as having "generally failed in a most essential particular," their conduct in mutinies. "There never has been a mutiny," he says, "without the connivance at, or direct participation in, of one and all the native officers, and their silence and secrecy on what passes under their own observation is conclusive of their inutility as officers in regiments."

On the Nature and Character of the Consular Service, with some Official, Notarial, Mercantile, and other Forms, required in the Transactions of a Consular Office. By John Green, Esq., Her Majesty's Consul in Continental Greece. London. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

This is a succinct and popular exposition of the office and duties of a consul, which will afford all the practical information that is furnished by voluminous treatises upon the subject. Mr. Green has elucidated the privileges, as well as the jurisdiction, of consuls; discussed the question whether consuls should be restricted from trading, and treated of the official intercourse of British consuls with various functionaries, and with private individuals.

It might be supposed that little cause could exist for disputes between consuls of different nations; but such cases, it appears, are by no means unfrequent. The Chevalier d'Arvieux gives an amusing description of the ceremonies and circumspection with which the consuls treated each other in his time, and mentions that, at Smyrna, the English and French consuls, in consequence of the former refusing to cede the pas to the latter, as a matter of right, never went on the public walk at the same time, lest they might meet, when bloodshed would have been the consequence; and one day, the English consul having paid a visit of ceremony to the Capitan Pasha before the French consul, he received from the latter a box on the ear, and his chair was pulled from under him!

The collection of forms must be useful to persons appointed consuls or vice-consuls, as there are no prescribed rules in respect to the documents required in the transaction of their business.

Gardening for Children. Edited by the Rev. C. A. Johns, B. A., F. L. S. London. Cox.

An elegant little volume of simple directions in horticulture, adapted not merely to the use of children, but suited for cottagers and amateur gardeners on a small scale.

Kit Bam's Adventures; or the Yarns of an Old Mariner. By MARY COWDEN CLARKE. Illustrated by Geo. Cruikshank. London. Grant and Griffiths.

This is just the kind of book likely to become exceedingly popular with youth of both sexes. The "yarns," which are very amusing, treat of land and sea, and are free from objectionable passages.

CONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION for LIFE, FIRE, and MARINE ASSURANCES.—Established by Royal Charter, 1720.—Offices, 7, Royal Exchange, and 10, Regent Street.

No extra premium is charged for Officers in the Army and Navy, unless on actual service, and then they are very liberally treated,—as are Civil and Military Officers in the Hon. East-India Company's Service.

JOHN LAURENCE, Secretary.

DORTABLE SODA WATER APPARATUS. BASETTS.—This apparatus will enable persons to make Soda Water themselves at any time, and at a trifting expense (about 1d, per bottle). It is also applicable for rendering most beverages effervescent and sparkling, such as Gooseberry Wine, Cider, Ale, and Lemonade. Flat soft water can also be very greatly improved by its aid. Part of the apparatus can be made available as a corkscrew, or a siphon, for drawing off ANY PORTION of a bottle of champagne. It is portable, being only 6 in. by 2, and so simple in operation that a native servant may use it without risk of putting it out of order.—Price 10s. 6d, Manufactory,—16, CASTLE STREET, HOLBORN.

TEREMIE'S SEDATIVE SOLUTION of OPIUM, ERECHIE S SEDATIVE SOLUTION Of OPTION, first prepared at Patna, in Bengal.—The nobility, gentry, and gentlemen of the Faculty, are respectfully informed that this valuable preparation of Opium, so highly recommended in India as a safe and efficient remedy in all cases requiring; the use of Opium, and in Epidemic Cholera especially, is now prepared exclusively (by desire of the representative of the late Capt, Jeremic, later assistant to Sir Charles D'Oyley, Bart., opium agent in Bengal), by SAVORY and MOORE, Chemists to the Queen, 143, New Bond Street, and 220, Regent Street, London.

CLEAR and SOFT SKIN. — ROWLANDS' KALYDOR.—an Oriental Balaamic Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, puritying, and soothing effects on the skin; while by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it expels all impurities from the surface, allays every tendency to indiammation, and thus effectually dissipates all reduces, tan, pimples, spots, fseckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nersing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it aliay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and bleak winds of winter, and, in cases of sun-bura, stings of insects, chilblains, or chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively been acknowledged. Its puritying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Mojesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britatin, and the several courts of Europe, together with the title of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Cur.—Beware of spurious "Kalydons" for sale, containing mineral autringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. The words—"Rowlanns' Kalydons" are on the wrapper of the genuine article; and the words "A.Rowlann & Son, 20, Hatton Garden," are also engraved (by desire of the Hon. Commissioners) on the Government stamp affixed on each bottle. Price is, 6d, and 8s. 6d. Bold by the proprietors and by all respectable Chemista and perfumers. NLEAR and SOFT SKIN. - ROWLANDS' KALY-

OUSTACHIOS, WHISKERS, or EYEBROWS, at pleasure, by using GRIMSTONE'S AROMATIC REGENERATOR, for promoting and improving the growth of the human hair; the only known specific that will regenerate a new growth of hair. Sold by Sanger, Oxford Street; Barckay and Son, Farringdon Street; and all chemists and medicine venders, in bottles at 4s., 7s., and 11s. each, including a pamphlet of testimonials, and directions for using this essential spirit, drawn from aromatic herbs and flowers. By the application of a few drops to the crown of the head, it will remove the most violent headache in a few minutes. It is a delightful toilet perfume. On the receipt of money orders, a liberal discount to dealers is allowed. The 7s. contains two 4s., the 11s. four times the quantity of the 4s. Retail agents appointed on receiving money orders, to William Grimstone, Herbary, Highgate, near London.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them, by introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronized by all the first surgeous in the kingdom, HUXLEY and Co., 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

POR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Price 2s. 6d. Patroniz d by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and H.R.H. the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a sot state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Howard's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Prepared only by Mr. Thos. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George-st., Hanover-square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Starkie, 4, Strand; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and all Medicine Vendyrs. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

BILLIOUS COMPLAINTS, INDIGESTION, FLA-TULENCY, and AFFECTIONS of the LIVER may be Cured by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Symptoms indicative of these disorders are, a feeling of nausea, distention, and spasmodic pain in the stomach, sense of oppression and sinking after cating, want of appetite, heartburn, languor, de-jection of spirits, and general debility. The removal of the cause of com-plaint is the most important step, for which purpose have recourse to Hollo-way's Pills, as they possess such cleansing and renovating properties, that the action of the liver is specific corrected, the redundancy of bile carried off, the stomach strengthened, the spirits revived, and the patient is restored to perfect health.

WILLIAM MARTIN BOYCE and CO.'S EAST-INDIA and GENERAL AGENCY.—127, Leadenhall Street, opposite the India House, London.

site the India House, London.

Mr. W. M. BOYCE, late of the Indian Navy, begs to Intimate that he has commenced business as an East-Indian and General Agent.

In soliciting the patronage of his numerous friends in India, both European and Native, and that of the public generally, W. M. BOYCE trusts, by the most unwearied attention to the various interests and wants of those who may honour him with their support, to render his Agency as efficient as possible, W. M. B. is prepared to transact every description of Agency business, Including the procuring and forwarding of supplies of every kind; passages to India, round the Cape or Overland; clearing and warehousing of luggage, &c; transmission of packages, parcels, and letters overland.

Arrangements have been made for clearing and disposing of baggage belonging to parties arriving from India, either by the Cape of Good Hope or by Alexandria. Passengers arrived by the latter route, and desirous of having their luggage cleared without delay, should write to Boyce and Co., via Marseilles, who will always have their Agents in attendance at Southampton.

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

I MMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain in those Colonics), have been auvised to make known that they can supply a comfortable Outfit, including Bedding, for Male of Framale Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, Bishopsoate Street within (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outflu they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote Emigration, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAYAL and MILLTARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPBEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the Cabin-Passenger Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, Bishopsgate Street within), LONDON, and each branch at St. George's Crescent, Liverpole.

VERLAND ROUTE to INDIA, vid TRIESTE.—A ateamer leaves Trieste for Alexandria direct on the 25th of each month, in correspondence with the Calcutta and Bombay line of Steamers. In addiin correspondence with the Calcutta and Bomoay line of Steamers. In addition to this route, there is a BL-MONTHUY communication between Trieste and Alexandria, vid Greece. For plans of Steamers, and to secure passages to Alexandria, Syria, Greece, Constantinople, Black Sea, &c. apply at the Agency of the Austrian Lloyd's, 137, Leadenhall-street.

ENTLEMEN desirous of becoming MEMBERS of LENTLEMEN desirous of becoming MEMBERS of the EUROPEAN CLUB must apply personally, or forward their addresses to the SECRETARY, 13. GEORGE STREET, HANOVER SQUARE, LONDON, when they will be furnished with a copy of the rules, the form of application, and any other information they may require.

The DINNERS will be on a scale hitherto unattempted in this country; the services of a renowned Chef de Cuisine have been secured, and arrangements entered into with some of the first houses in Paris to supply the Club with those exquisite vands and delicacies only to be procured in that Capital, Entrance Fee, £10. 10s. Annual Subscription, £6. 6s. Annual Subscription, £4. 4s., if residence and place of business be more than 10 and less than 50 miles from London; beyond 50 miles, £2. 2s. annually.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The London General Mourning Warehouse, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street,—W. C. Jay, Proprietor.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

The rollicines cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence. manent residence.

Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

The Annuities offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonial Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

SUMMARY & REVIEW OF EASTERN NEWS.

EVENTS of some importance having attended the movements of the army of the Punjab, they claim priority in our present Summary.

The last advices from the Rechna Dooab left the British forces under Brigadier-General Campbell, on the 19th November, waiting the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief, concentrated at Allipore (called in some accounts Akalghur) and Saharup, not far from Ramnuggur, situated on the left bank of the Chenab, where that river is deflected from its south-westerly course nearly to the west. These forces, with the head-quarter brigades, amounted to upwards of 21,000 men (5,500 Europeans and 15,500 natives). with 90 pieces of cannon. The Sikhs opposed to them, under Shere Singh, when joined by the Bunnoo insurgents, are computed, in the despatch of the Commanderin-Chief, at from 30,000 to 40,000 men, with 28 guns. Their main body was posted on the right bank of the river, which was fordable, protected by a field-work, and a masked battery commanded the left bank. An island in the middle of the river was occupied by a detachment of the enemy, whilst a strong body (about 4,000), mostly cavalry, were in and round Ramnuggur, which was well protected by outworks. Shere Singh had occupied Allipore up to the night of the 17th, when he withdrew the greater part of his forces to the right bankof the river, where he was joined by the Bunnoo Sikhs.

The Commander-in-Chief, with the head-quarter camp (consisting of the brigades of Colonels Pope, Mountain, and Pennycuick), arrived on the 21st at Noewallah, close to the camp of Brigadier-General Campbell, which he visited the same day; and, with his sanction, orders were issued in the camp at Saharun for a strong detachment of cavalry, artillery, and infantry (the details of which are given in another column) to assemble quietly at 3 o'clock on the ensuing morning, for a reconnoissance, and his Excellency came over from his own camp to superintend it. The detachment reached the Chenab, near Ramnuggur, at 7 a.m., hoping to surprise the detachment of the enemy on the left bank; but having had timely notice of the approach of the British troops, they had crossed the river.

The main object of Lord Gough was to ascertain the position and strength of the enemy, who was found encamped along the right bank in a position strongly intrenched. On reaching the bank of the river, the artillery, supported by H.M.'s 3rd regiment of dragoons, were extended in front, the main body keeping out of range of the enemy's guns, which opened immediately, and H.M.'s 14th Dragoons took post behind a strong fortified enclosure. In thus drawing out the fire of the Sikhs, our guns were found unequal to their heavy metal. The firing, however, continued on both sides for a considerable time, in the course of which a troop of our horse artillery forded the river, in order to pursue some fugitives, who had waded in, with a view of crossing; but, pressing on too eagerly, they got into heavy sand, and when recalled, one of the guns could not be moved; the fire of the enemy became so hot that it was abandoned, and our cavalry, which had been put forward, was obliged to take shelter in a tope of trees. At this moment, some of the enemy being discovered on the left bank, the 3rd Dragoons moved down, by order, to dislodge them, which they did in gallant style, driving them back to their position. Soon after, another and a more formidable body of the enemy (about 4,000 strong) was seen on the ground which had been occupied by our artillery in the morning, and the Commander-in-Chief directed the 3rd and 14th Dragoons, the 5th and 8th Light Cavalry, and Holmes's irregular horse, to attack them. His Lordship gave the order in front of the 14th Light Dragoons (old Peninsulars), under Lieutenant-Colonel Havelock, who dashed off, and in the face of murderous volleys of shell and shot from the Sikh batteries, charged in the midst of the enemy. "A more fearful sight," observes an eye-witness, "was perhaps never witnessed on a field of battle, the British troops being drawn up and standing silent spectators of this conflict of 450 sabres against 5,000 men, with heavy cannon." A body of Sikh cavalry, which appeared as if ready to receive the dragoons, and actually crossed swords with them, broke and separated to the right and left, allowing our men to enter. This was a stratagem, and, in their impetuosity, our gallant dragoons fell into the snare. Between this spot and the Sikh batteries, to which the dragoons now pressed, was a precipice, deep and wide, and beyond it a nullah or water-course. The 3rd Dragoons and irregulars were halted. Colonel Havelock, calling to his regiment, "Follow me!" put his charger to the leap, and was soon through the nullah, accompanied by some of his gallant men, who formed on the opposite bank, in the very centre of the enemy's intrenchments. But the ravine was filled with matchlockmen, who opened a galling fire upon the cavalry on both banks, picking out the officers,—our men being, moreover, exposed to the fire of the batteries. Here fell Brigadier-General Cureton, the first cavalry officer in India, and the gallant Colonel Havelock; Captain Fitzgerald was mortally wounded, and has died: upwards of 120 men were killed and wounded. The officers wounded were—Brigadier Hoggan, Captain Gall, 14th Dragoons; Lieutenant McMahon, ditto, severely; Lieutenant Scudamore and Cornet Chetwynd, ditto; Captains Cautley and Barnes, 3rd Dragoons; Lieutenant-Colonel Alexander, 5th Cavalry (lost right arm); Captain Ryley, ditto; Ensign G. N. Hardinge, 45th N.I.; Captain Newbold, commissariat; Captain Holmes, 12th Irregular Cavalry. Brigadier-General Cureton was shot through the chest; Colonel Havelock, one of the most chivalrous officers in the service, was wounded in the right hand, had his left leg and left arm nearly cut off, and was left dead. When last seen, he was fighting desperately, with his left arm disabled. His body, and the bodies of eleven of his men, who fell fighting by his side, were found decapitated. In one of the charges, a Sikh standard-bearer was killed, and the standard taken, by a native trooper of the 5th Light Cavalry.

This check will probably have the beneficial effect of teaching our commanders not to despise the enemy with whom they are now contending. It is for experienced military critics to say whether the conversion of this reconnoissance into an attack was prudent or unavoidable, and whether there was anything precipitate in the execution.

At one o'clock P.M., the troops were ordered to move back to their new encamping-ground, about a mile and a half distant, facing the enemy, along the line of a dry nullah, with Ramnuggur in the rear, where the Commander-in-Chief resolved to await the arrival of the heavy guns and mortars.

The Sikhs continued to fire at intervals during several succeeding days. On the 24th they took a European soldier prisoner, who was seen goaded by the Sikhs with their spears to make him run. He was, however, released, and reported that he had been well treated! He brought letters from Shere Singh to the Commander-in-Chief and the Governor-General. During the 25th they were engaged intrenching themselves, whilst batteries were erected on our side, and demonstrations were made by the Commander-in-Chief, with the view of drawing the enemy's attention to the main ford in front of the British camp, and, if they could silence the enemy's, of acting simultaneously with a force which he prepared to despatch across the river, in another direction.

On the 30th November the siege ordnance, park, &c. arrived in camp, and that night Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell, with a strong force of 7,000 men, composed of three brigades of infantry (including two European regiments, 24th and 61st), a brigade of cavalry (including the 3rd Light Dragoons), three troops of horse artillery, and two light field batteries, moved up the river upon a ford, which the Major-General, however, did not deem practicable, and he accordingly proceeded to Wuzeerabad, 22 miles up the river, where he crossed on the night of the 1st of December, in boats secured by Lieutenant Nicholson. Lord Gough, in order to aid this flanking movement, commenced a heavy cannonade upon the batteries and encampment of the enemy opposed to him, which forced the Sikhs to fall back about two miles, and enabled the Commander-in-Chief, on the night of the 2nd, to push his batteries and breastworks to the bank of the river, and he detached another brigade of infantry, under Brigadier Godby, on the 3rd, across the river on pontoons, six miles higher up, which got into communication with General Thackwell. The cannonade and demonstration to cross was still kept up at Ramnuggur, fixing a large body of the enemy to defend that point.

Major-General Thackwell, according to the instructions of the Commander-in-Chief, halted, to await the junction of Brigadier Godby's brigade, within 3 or 4 miles of the left of the enemy's position. Encouraged by this halt, or penetrating our design, on the afternoon of the 3rd, the principal part of the Sikh forces moved to attack the detached column, and an attempt was made to turn both Major-General Thackwell's flanks by bodies of cavalry. After about an hour's distant cannonade on the part of the Sikhs, the British artillery not returning a shot, the enemy advanced, when a most destructive fire was poured in upon them, which silenced their guns, and caused them severe loss. The day being nearly spent, the exhausted state of his force induced the Major-General to postponehis attack upon the flank and rear of the enemy until the following morning; but in the night, the whole Sikh force decamped, carrying off their artillery, and exploding their magazines. The Commander-in-Chief immediately pushed across the river the 9th Lancers and the 14th Light Dragoons, under Major-General Gilbert, in pursuit; but the Sikhs, who divided into three bodies, retreated in great disorder. Lord Gough represents it as "more a flight than a retreat,"-a great portion of their army, not belonging to the revolted Khalsa troops, having dispersed and returned to their homes; "thus, I trust," adds his Lordship, "effectually frustrating the views of the rebel Shere Singh and his rebellious associates." As some compensation and consolation for the preceding check, this important success was cheaply purchased; the loss does not exceed forty or fifty men; no officer was killed, and but three were wounded.

The escape of Shere Singh's force, in the presence of so large a British army, has drawn forth some severe strictures upon the alleged "blunders" which are supposed to have caused it. The delay occasioned by not crossing General Thackwell's detachment at the ford indicated by Lord Gough, twelve miles below Wuzeerabad, which his Excellency states in his despatch, "I had every reason to consider very practicable, and which I have since ascertained was so," not only gave time to the enemy, but added to the fatigue of the troops, who were compelled to rest as soon as they had crossed the river. The Bombay Times moreover, charges the despatch of Lord Gough with the suppression of well-known facts. "The manceuvres ultimately resorted to," observes that journal, "Showed with how small a measure of tactical skill victory without loss might have been insured; but for an uninterrupted series of blunders, Thackwell might have got into the rear of the enemy on the 2nd, with his force still fresh, while Godby and Penny were on their flanks, and our heavy batteries commanded their position in front. They might in this case have been cannonaded on all sides, and almost extinguished on the spot; as it is, they have escaped to their mountains to wear us out by a Guerilla war."

Later advices, though not very explicit, afford reason to think that Shere Singh has only deferred his fate for a short season. Major-General Thackwell had commenced a hot pursuit of the enemy, who, encumbered by his heavy artillery, could scarcely outstrip our cavalry. Lord Gough's force was also in pursuit; and as Shere Singh was retreating upon the upper Jelum, it was supposed that he had a position prepared on that river, where he would make a stand. Five of his guns and his elephant had been taken. A letter from the camp, dated the 6th December, mentions a report that General Thackwell had come up with Shere Singh at a place called Dingah (no such place is marked on the map), 24 miles further from the Chenab; that Shere had been joined by some of the Peshawur troops; and that it was supposed, if he eluded Thackwell's force, he would make a stand at Rotas, and, if beaten there, retreat into the hills.

The design of this leader was evidently to penetrate into the Jullundur Dooab, in which disturbances had taken place by mutinous and marauding bands. In the Rechna Dooab (between the Ravee and the Chenab), Brigadier Wheeler had been actively and successfully employed. At a place called Khuleelwallah (north-east of Goojranwallah), two rebel chiefs, named Chunda Singh and Goordut Singh, had assembled some 3,000 men, and were levying black mail. On the 19th November, the brigadier, on nearing the place, directed the cavalry, consisting of the 7th Light Cavalry, 2nd Irregulars, with Swinley's troop of horse artillery, to advance at a hard trot, whilst the 3rd

N.I. and guns were ordered to come up as fast as possible A body of the enemy, on the approach of the force, fled, and were cut up, to the number of 200; "they did not ask for quarter," observes an eye-witness, "and they had none." On the arrival of the whole force, the fort, which was of considerable size and very strong, was regularly invested, and a smart fire was kept up during the night, when the garrison effected their escape, with the loss of 100 men killed. Our loss was trifling.

Brigadier Penny, commanding the 7th brigade of the army of the Punjab, had received instructions to attack the fort of Jubbur, the head-quarters of Uttur Singh, by whom the communications of the army with Lahore were intercepted. Upon reaching the place, on the 25th November, the killadar amused him until the arrival of the heavy guns, when he surrendered unconditionally, the garrison consisting of only fifty, Uttur Singh having, three or four days before, departed with 2,000 men to join Shere Singh.

Subsequent to this, Brigadier Wheeler was obliged to retrograde to the Jullundur Dooab, where the insurgents had had the audacity to invest Puthankote, which was relieved by Major Sympson, 29th N.I. The insurgents retreated to Deenanaggur, where they were attacked on the 26th November by Hodgson's corps (Sikhs), and dispersed. The force then moved against a rebel chief, who had declared his independence, at Aknot and Umb, at both which places he was attacked on the 2nd December by Hodgson's corps, and a wing of the 29th N.I.; many of his followers were killed and the rest dispersed. Our loss was slight; Lieutenant and Adjutant Faddy, 29th N.I., was severely wounded. The Delhi Gazette, 9th December, states that the Memoree Rajah had risen in the upper range, with a force of 1,100 men, and seized Teeree; and that Beckram Singh was also in rebellion. "These rajahs," it is added, "it seems, had emissaries from the Sikhs for some time amongst them." Ram Singh had likewise re-appeared in this dooab, at the head of some of the men who had escaped from the forts of Moraree and Rangrungul. The state of this dooab, it was expected, would require the presence of a portion of the army of reserve.

We have been thus particular in our details, that the reader may perceive the real condition of affairs in the Punjab country, and it will be observed that the population, the bulk of which consists of Hindus and Mahomedans, has no where shewn symptoms of disaffection and sympathy with the insurgents. Nor is this surprising. The avowed maxim of Har Govind, the war teacher of the Sikhs, is, "If you fall in with a Hindu, beat and plunder him; but it is right to slay a Mahomedan, wherever you meet him." The enemies against whom our troops are acting—the bands that have recruited the ranks of Shere Singh and his father, and are raising the standard of revolt in the dooabs, -are the relice of those turbulent and rapacious soldiers, who have been too long habituated to an uncontrolled license to settle down into orderly habits, and who would continue to disturb the public peace under a native or a British government: like humours in the natural body, they must be expelled or extirpated, before the system can acquire a sound and healthy action.

Chuttur Singh was at Nowshera (200 miles from the headquarters of the other insurgent force, under his son), on the 18th November; a portion of his force (3,000 men, and 11 guns) was on the right bank of the Indus, beleaguring the fort of Attok, which still held out under Lieutenant Herbert. Major Lawrence and his party had been delivered up to Chuttur Singh by the treacherous Sooltan Mahomed Khan. Chuttur treated his captives with every mark of respect. Captain Abbott was still at Nara, in the Upper Hazareh country. The only intelligence reported respecting Maharajah Golab Singh's force is that it was on its way from Jummoo.

At Lahore all was quiet.

Up to the 6th December, no occurrence of any moment had taken place at Mooltan, where affairs remained nearly in statu quo, except the march of a strong detachment, of 5,000 men, with two guns, under Nariain Singh, it was supposed, to assist the kardar of Jhung, (an important manufacturing town on the Chenab, near to where it is joined by the Jelum, about ninety miles above Mooltan), who was besieged in his fort by the people of the country. Shaikh Emam-ood-deen, with his force, and two guns, had marched to look after the Sikh commander, and, if possible, get possession of Jhung.

None of the reinforcements from Roree had arrived at the date of the latest letters from Mooltan (December 3rd), but the advanced detachment, consisting of a regiment of N.I., the Scinde horse, and a battery, were in proximity, and expected to join the camp in a few days. The siege-train had reached the confluence of the Chenab and Ghara. The main body was not expected before Christmas. The last division of the Bombay field force left Sukkur on the 29th November. Some dissatisfaction appears to have been felt by Major-General Auchmuty at being superseded in the command of this force; he is represented to have appealed to the Commander-in-Chief, and, in the mean time, interfered with Major-General Whish, disobeying orders sent to him, and halting the field force.

Scinde was perfectly quiet; and the Mahomedan population of the Dherajat (on the other side of the Indus) showed no symptom of disaffection.

Our communications with Affghanistan being cut off, no authentic intelligence could be procured from thence. Dost Mahomed Khan is reported to have arrived at Jellalabad, and one of his sons at Peshawur.

We must despatch the local rews of the presidencies, which presents no feature of much importance, briefly. The Governor-General had reached Umballah on the 25th November. Some disturbance had occurred at Allahabad, in consequence of a dispute, of a religious complexion, between the Hindoos and Mahomedans of that city. The details will be found under the Bengal head.

The Nizam has at last summoned resolution to dismiss his obnoxious minister. On the 20th of November, he announced officially to the Resident that Suraj-ool Moolk was no longer in office, and that he had nominated Syf Jung in his stead. Even the bitterest enemies of the late Dewan, it is said, condemn the choice, as the new minister is a man whose private character and official capacities are equally at a discount. The Resident has not concurred in this appointment. Letters from Goomsur report fresh disturbances in that district. On the night of the 7th November, a body of Chockra Bissye's partisans plundered and burned the village of Kontadoro. On the 11th, Captain McViccar proceeded to Chokapaud, with two companies of the 18th N.I., and Colonel Campbell to the hills, on the 13th, with an escort of two companies of the same corps, and a party of sebundies. Chokra Bissye sent a letter to the people of Ganjam, threatening the destruction of their property, which induced them to call a meeting, at which 2,000 or 3,000 persons were present, and they petitioned the Government that steps might be taken to protect them from the outrages of the rebels. The people are represented to be in a state of great excitement and alarm.

The Bishop of Calcutta had embarked at Bombay for Ceylon.

OPERATIONS ON THE CHENAB.

NOTIFICATION.

Foreign Department, Camp Umballah, Dec. 8th, 1848.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General has much pleasure in publishing, for general information, the following despatch from his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief:—

"Head-Quarters, Flying Camp, Hillah, Dec. 5th, 1848.
"My Lord,—It has pleased Almighty God to vouchsafe to the British arms the most successful issue to the extensive combinations rendered necessary for the purpose of effecting the passage of the Chenab, the defeat and dispersion of the Sikh force under the insurgent, Rajah Shere Singh, and the numerous Sikh sirdars who had the temerity to set at defiance the British power. This force, from all my information, amounted to from 30 to 40,000 men, with 28 guns, and were strongly entrenched on the right bank of the Chenab, at the principal ford, about two miles from the town of Ramnuggur.

"My despatch of the 23rd of November will have made your lordship acquainted with the motives which induced me to penetrate thus far into the Punjaub, and the occurrences of the previous day, when the enemy was ejected from the left bank of the Chenab. My daily private communications will have placed your lordship in possession of the difficulties I had to encounter in a country so little known, and in the passage of the river, the fords of which were most strictly watched by a numerous and vigilant enemy, and presenting more difficulties than most rivers, whilst I was surrounded by a hostile peasantry.

"Finding that to force the passage at the ford in my front must have been attended with considerable loss, from the very strong entrenchments and well-selected batteries which protected the passage, I instructed the field engineer, Major Tremenheere, in co-operation with the quarter-master general's department, to ascertain (under the difficulties before noticed) the practicability of several fords reported to exist on both my flanks, while I had batteries erected, and made demonstrations so as to draw the attention of the enemy to the main ford in my front, and with the view, if my batteries could silence their guns, to act simultaneously with the force I proposed to detach under an officer of much experience in India, Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell.

"On the night of the 30th November, this officer, in command of the following force (and more particularly detailed in the accompanying memorandum), three troops horse artillery (European); two light field batteries (do.); one brigade of cavalry (one European and four native regts.); three ditto of infantry (two European and six native regts.); two 18 pounders, with elephant draft and detail artillery, pontoon train, with two companies sappers, moved up the river in light marching order, without tents, and with three days' provisions, upon a ford which I had every reason to consider very practicable (and which I have since ascertained was so), but which the major-general deemed so difficult and dangerous that he proceeded (as he was instructed, should such turn out to be the case), to Wuzeerabad, a town twenty-two miles up the river, where Lieut. Nicholson, a most energetic assistant to the resident at Lahore, had secured sixteen boats, with the aid of which this force effected the passage on the evening of the 1st and morning of the 2nd inst.

"Upon learning, by an A. D. C., sent for the purpose, that the major-general's force had crossed, and was in movement, I directed a heavy cannonade to commence upon the enemy's batteries and encampment at Ramnuggur, which was returned by only a few guns, which guarded effectually the ford, but were so buried, that, although the practice of our artillery was admirable, under Major Mowatt and Capt. Sir Richmond Shakespear, we could not, from the width of the river, silence This cannonade, however, inflicted very severe loss to the enemy in their camp and batteries, and forced him to fall back with his camp about two miles, which enabled me, without the loss of a man, to push my batteries and breastworks, on the night of the 2nd, to the bank of the river, the principal ford of which I then commanded. By this I was enabled to detach another brigade of infantry, under Brigadier Godby, at daylight on the 3rd, which effected the passage, with the aid of the pontoon train, six miles up the river, and got into communication with Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell.

The cannonade and demonstration to cross at Ramnuggur was kept up on the 2nd and 3rd, so as to fix a large portion of the enemy there to defend that point. Having communicated to Sir Joseph my views and intentions, and although giving discretionary powers to attack any portion of the Sikh force sent to oppose him, I expressed a wish that, when he covered the crossing of Brigadier Godby's brigade, he should await their junction, except the enemy attempted to retreat; this induced him to halt within about three or four miles to the left of their position. About two o'clock on the 3rd, the principal part of the enemy's force, encouraged by the halt, moved to attack the detached column, when a smart cannonade on the part of the enemy took place, and an attempt to turn both Major-Gen. Sir J. Thackwell's flanks by numerous bodies of cavalry was made. After about one hour's distant cannonade on the part of the Sikhs, the British artillery never returning a shot, the enemy took courage and advanced, when our artillery, commanded by that excellent officer Lieut.-Col. C. Grant, poured in upon them a most destructive fire, which soon silenced all their guns, and frustrated all their operations, with very severe loss upon their side; but the exhausted state both of man and horse induced the majorgeneral to postpone the attack upon their flank and rear, as he was directed, until the following morning, the day having nearly closed when the cannonade ceased.

"I regret to say that, during the night of the 3rd, the whole of the Sikh force precipitately fled, concealing or carrying with them their artillery, and exploding their magazines. I immediately pushed across the river the 9th Lancers and 14th Light Dragoons in pursuit, under that most energetic officer Major-Gen. Sir Walter Gilbert. The Sikhs, it appears, retreated in the greatest disorder, leaving in the villages numerous wounded men. They have subdivided into three divisions, which have become more a flight than a retreat, and I understand a great portion of those not belonging to the revolted Khalsa army have dispersed and returned to their homes; thus, I trust, effectually frustrating the views of the rebel Shere Singla and his rebel associates.

"I have not received Major-Gen. Sir J. Thakwell's report, nor the returns of his loss; but I am most thankful to say that our whole loss subsequent to the 22nd November does not much exceed forty men. No officers have been killed, and but three wounded. Capt. Austen, of the artillery, only appears severely so "I have to congratulate your lordship upon events so fraught with importance, and which will, I have no doubt, with God's blessing, tend to most momentous results. It is, as I anticipated, most gratifying to me to assure your lordship that the noble army under my command has, in these operations, upheld the well-established fame of the arms of India, both European and native, each vying who should best perform his duty; every officer, from the general of division to the youngest subaltern, well supported their Commander-in-Chief, and cheerfully carried out his views, which at a future period, and when we shall have effected the views of the Government, I shall feel proud in bringing to your lordship's notice.—I have, &c.

(Signed) Gouds.

24th, 61st, 2nd European Infantry.

The following details of the subsequent sanguinary affair at Ramnuggur is from the Delhi Gazette of Dec. 8:—

The enemy, who had been reported in force at the several places indicated, but who had always evacuated them before they were occupied by us, were at length ascertained to have determined on making a stand at Ramnuggur, and Gen. Cureton was directed to halt until more troops came up. Brigadier-Gen. Campbell joined his camp on the 12th, taking command as senior officer, and bringing up another brigade. A further advance was made shortly afterwards, and on the 17th the camp was near Alkalghur, commonly written Alleepoor in the letters Gen. Cureton went on with a small party to look from camp. at the village in the afternoon, and was fired upon; some of the rebel cavalry were also seen on that occasion, but not a man after that on the 17th or 18th, though a report was then still rife that Shere Singh had on the 17th strengthened his force on the left bank of the Chenab. If he did so on that day, he certainly withdrew all the troops to the right bank on the 18th, as a party that went close up to Ramnuggur could hear nothing of them, and it was previously ascertained that Alleepoor had been evacuated during the night of the 17th November. the morning of the 18th the whole force were turned out about four in the morning, and remained on their parade till sunrise, when they were dismissed, and the tents ordered to be repitched. H. M.'s 61st Foot reached the camp of Brigadier-Gen. Campbell on the morning of the 19th, 850 strong, and were attached to the brigade commanded by Brigadier Hoggan, who had assumed charge. Authentic information had been received in the camp of Brig.-Gen. Campbell on the 21st, then pitched at Saharun (nine miles S.S.W. of Ramnuggur, and consequently considerably to the left of Deedar Singh ka Killah, and a short distance from the camp near Akalghur), that Shere Singb-had, on the 17th, been joined by the Bunnoo troops under Ram Singh, and that he was, on the morning of the same day (the 21st), encamped on the right bank of the Chenab, with a picket of three regiments and four guns on the left bank. It was then surmised that, in consequence of the proximity of the head-quarters' camp accompanied by Gens. Thackwell and Gilbert, operations would commence on the 22nd, especially as Lieut. Nicolson's Patans having seized twelve boats at Wuzeerabad on the first advance of Gen. Cureton to Goojranwallah about the 7th of November, it was considered that these would, with the assistance of the pontoon train, afford all the necessary facilities for crossing the Chenab. The Com-mander-in-Chief having also considered that the time hadarrived for the commencement of operations, orders were issued late on the night of the 21st of November, in the camp of Brig. -Gen. Campbell at Saharun (with the sanction of His Excellency, who rode over to the camp of Brig.-Gen. Campbell on the afternoon of the 21st), for the following troops to parada on the ensuing morning, at 3 o'clock, in front of the centre of the camp, without sound of bugle, trumpet, or drum : - The whole of the cavalry (H. M.'s 3rd and 14th regts. of Light Dragoons, the 5th and 8th regts. of Light Cavalry, and 12th Irregular Cavalry). Two troops of Horse Artillery (Duncan's and Warner's). Two field batteries (Austin's and Dawes's), and two brigades of infantry (those of Brigadiers Godby, 2nd Europ. regt. and 70th N.I.), and Hoggan (H.M.'s 61st foot, 36th and 46th N.I.) The cavalry to be formed on the right, artillery on the left of the cavalry, and the infantry on the left of the whole. The cavalry and infantry to be formed in column of troops and companies at quarter distance, left in front. The camp was to continue standing, Brigadier Eckford's Brigade, with Capt. Duncan's troop of Horse Artillery, remaining as a guard for the camp; the 12th Irregular Cavalry to cover the rear of the whole column. In this order, this strong detachment marched, under the personal command of the Commander-in-Chief (who had come up from the headquarters' camp to superintend the proceedings of the morning), at the appointed time, and reached the left bank of the Chenab, near Ramnuggur, at an early hour, in the hope of surprising the detachment of the enemy, who were known to be on the same side. It would appear, however, that these had early intimation of the movement of the British troops, and had all retired across, except a few stragglers, and a picket, which fled, leaving their tents pitched. The object of the movement on our side was, however, mainly to ascertain the real strength and position of the enemy, and this was in some degree effected on clearing Ramnuggur towards the left bank of the river. Then it became apparent that their camp was pitched along the right bank of the river, which was seen to be crowded by thousands of men, whose white and light-coloured garments strongly contrasted with the bodies of the British troops, to which the eyes of our officers had been for some time past accustomed. In drawing out their fire, to ascertain their real strength in guns, and pressing perhaps rather too zealously in pursuit of those of the fugitives who appeared to be within reach, while crossing at the ford with water to the waist, Lieut.-Col. Lane's troop of Horse Artillery (2nd of the 3rd brigade) got into heavy sand before they were aware of it, and a leading borse having been shot, it was found, when the order came to limber up and retire, that one of the guns could not be moved. The Sikhs were not slow at perceiving this most inopportune embarrassment, and directed so hot a fire upon the spot that it was found necessary to abandon the gun, although a light field-battery was brought up to cover it (more than one account says that one or two tumbrils were abandoned at the same time, and others that two waggons were left with the gun, but we are somewhat inclined to believe that this is a mistake). But the fire of the enemy from guns that were sheltered, while ours were exposed in an open plain, was so heavy that nothing could be done beyond scattering a few of the nearest groups of the enemy, and then retiring. The cavalry were ordered to do the same, and take shelter from the enemy's round shot behind a tope of trees to the left, where they remained quietly for a time, the infantry being during that interim drawn up on the right. Some of the enemy being subsequently (it does not exactly appear at what precise time this was the case, but it must have been some time after the artillery retired) discovered on the left bank of the river further down to the left, a large number of our cavalry, amongst whom were the 3rd and 14th Light Dragoons, moved down by order to dislodge them. On approaching a body of Sikh cavalry, drawn up as if to receive them, these broke and separated to the right and left, when the Dragoons charging on were brought up by a nullah, or ravine, full of matchlockmen, who opened a most galling fire on the European cavalry, who were comparatively helpless, being unable to descend into the nullah. Here fell Brigadier-Gen. Cureton, who was shot through the heart, Lieut.-Col. Havelock dangerously wounded, and Capt. Holmes severely; and it was with some difficulty that the men were extricated from the trap into which they had been intentionally drawn by the enemy. Having effected their purpose (though we do not exactly see how), the cavalry returned; but in the mean time the Sikhs had come across, and taking the 6-pounder horse artillery gun (which had, however, been previously spiked by the gunners) off the carriage, bore it in triumph to their own side the river. At about 1 r. s. the troops who had up to that time continued under arms, received orders to move to their new encamping ground, forming line facing the enemy about a mile-and-a-half distant, with Ramnuggur in their rear, and there they remained during the 23rd.
A correspondent says he saw a ball fall within a yard of the Commander-in-Chief.

The Agra Messenger has the following graphic description of the fight at Ramnuggur from a Correspondent:

"Ramnuggur, 4, r. M., 22d Nov. 1848. " I am in the midst of blood and dust, and write to you from the field, but I pledge my word to the truth of the following report :

The troops arrived at Ramnuggur, at about seven, A. M., when the entire force of Shere Singh, consisting of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, from fifteen to twenty thousand men, were seen stretching in a dark line along the horizon. The enemy received us with his heavy guns from a strongly intrenched position, to which our artillery replied. Our guns, however, being only six and nine pounders were (as usual in Indian warfare) unequal to the heavy metal of the cannon of the enemy. firing continued on both sides for a considerable time, when a portion of the enemy having come over from their intrenchments, they were charged by the 3rd Dragoons in gallant style, who drove them back to their position. The Commander-in-Chief with his staff passed in front of the old Peninsular 14th Dragoons, commanded by Col. Havelock, and in a few minutes they were advanced within reach of the enemy's guns; the Sikhs having recrossed a second time the branch of the river which was between them and the British camp. A tremendous fire from four masked batteries, supported by the small arms of the infantry, in a moment opened upon them, throwing a terrific discharge from their heavy guns. Amidst a shower of shells and shot, which burst in murderous volleys among the squadrons of the dragoons, the trumpet sounded, the order to draw swords was given, followed by 'trot, gallop, charge !' The 14th, with the Colonel leading them in the front, dashed into the midst of the enemy, who threw themselves upon their faces on the approach of the columns, and rose and fired upon them as they passed. A more fearful sight perhaps was never witnessed on a field of battle, for the British army stood drawn up, both artillery and infantry, silent spectators of the bloody conflict of 450 sabres against an army amounting to more than 5,000 men, with heavy cannou. Between the 14th Dragoons and the Sikh batteries was a deep wide precipice, and beyond it there was a nullah. The gallant Col. Havelock put his charger at the former, crying 'Follow precipice, and beyond it there was a nullah. me,' and the regiment dashed over the brink after him, galloping through the water, and forming on the opposite bank, in the very centre of the enemy's intrenchments. They charged a second time, and passed away to their camp, by an order from Lord Gough, who highly eulogized their 'noble charges.' Such indomitable courage may teach the fue a useful lesson, but I regret to say that Col. Havelock was slain, and a number of the officers either mortally or severely wounded. The gallant Gen. Cureton fell by round shot about the same time. This distinguished officer commenced life, although the son of a gentleman, as a private soldier in the King's Dragoons, and has thus ended his military career with the old 14th fighting under his command.'

On the 28th November a brother of Uttur Singh, the chief of Jubbur, rode leisurely with two mounted followers up to the main picquet, and surrendered himself to Sir Walter Gilbert, to whom he presented a nuzzur. He was immediately conveyed to the quarters of the Commander-in-Chief. His name is Cheyt Sing; he was a colonel of cavalry with Shere Singh.

THE LATE BRIGADIER-GENERAL CURETON.

A GENTLEMAN by birth and education, he entered the militia at the age of sixteen, as an ensign, and very shortly afterwards obtained his lieutenancy. His habits were somewhat prodigal, and he became embarrassed and encircled by difficulties. His friends either could not or would not extricate him, and to avoid arrest, he suddenly disappeared, and procured a commission in another militia regiment. For a short time his whereabout was unknown; but his creditors at length discovered and threatened him. He again absented himself, and, disguised as a sailor, made his escape. From the circumstance of his regimentals having been left on the beach, whence he embarked on board a boat for London, it was supposed he had been drowned while bathing.

On arriving in London, he met a recruiting party, and enlisted under the name of "Charles Roberts" in H.M.s 4th light dragoons. His good conduct and his intelligence recommended him to the notice of his superior officers, and when he proceeded to the Peninsula in 1810, he carried with him the most satisfactory recommendations.

He joined the 14th Light Dragoons at Portalegre in Portugal. His talents and his merits soon advanced him to the rank of corporal, then to that of serjeant. In this rank of life he acquitted himself so well, that in 1813 he was despached on some important duty to St. Jean de Luz-where he was recognised by an officer on the Duke of Wellington's staff, as an old acquaintance in the of the post to the head-quarters of the army. In 1814 he was gazetted as ensign in the 40th foot, in his own proper name, Charles Roberts Cureton, and shortly afterwards he effected an exchange into the 20th Light Dragoons. On the disbandment of that corps, after the war, he exchanged as a Lieutenant from half pay to full pay into the 16th Lancers, and when the corps was ordered to proceed to India he accompanied it. Brigadier-General Cureton's honourable career in the 16th Lancers is too well known to require mention at our hands. Throughout the whole of his military service—from the lowest grade to the distinguished position he recently reached—he always proved himself a brave soldier, an able and intelligent officer, and an upright and honourable man. As the head of a regiment he was alike respected by his officers and men; and after the late campaign on the Sutlej, when he was advanced to the important post of adjutant-general of H.M.'s troops in India, we doubt if there was an officer in any service who failed to rejoice at his good

Utterly destitute of vulgarity, he was untainted by that offensive presumption which too often attends on eminence so rapid and so lofty as was his. We have heard his unbending strictness often remarked upon; but we never once heard him accused of insolence or an overbearing demeanor. This is no trifling praise. His loss is indeed a severe one, not only to his family and his friends, but also to the country that he served. It is a curious circumstance that he should have closed his existence in the presence of the same regiment (the 14th Dragoons) in which, upwards of thirty-eight years ago, his military career may be said to have commenced.

THE LATE COLONEL CURETON served in the Peninsula from 1809 to the end of the war, and was present with the 14th Light Dragoons in the many actions and skirmishes that gallant corps was engaged in, including the battles of Tallavera, Busaco, and Fuentes d'Onor; siege of Badajoz, in vera, Busaco, and Fuentes d'Onor; siege of Badajoz, in April, 1812; battle of Salamanca, capture of Madrid, and battle of Vittoria. He served with the 40th at Orthes, Tarbes, and Toulouse. He was wounded in the right leg by a ride ball in crossing the Mondego, near Coimbra, 1st October, 1810; received a severe sabre cut on the head (skull fractured), another on the left hand, at Fuentes d'Onor, 5th May, 1811. He accompanied the 16th Lancers to India, 1822, and was present at the siege and capture of Bhurtpore, in 1825 6. He served as assistant and adjutant-general of cavalry in the campaign in Afghanistan, under Lord Keane, in 1839-40, and was present at the assault and capture of Ghuznee (medal). He was specially selected to command the advance column of the army on its route through the Bolan Pass and entrance into Afghanistan; and was also selected to command a force of cavalry detached in advance of the army to seize the enemy's guns and secure possession of the citadel of He com-Cabool in August, 1839, which he accomplished. manded a brigade of cavalry in the action of Maharajpore, on the 29th December, 1843 (medal), for which he was appointed a C.B. He again commanded a brigade of cavalry in the campaign on the Sutlej, and was engaged at Buddiwal and in the battles of Aliwal and Sobraon; in the two former he commanded the whole of the cavalry. In the General Order to the Army of the Punjaub, dated Head quarters, Camp Ramnuggur, 23rd November, 1848, he is thus mentioned: "Aware of the general esteem and respect in which Brigadier-General Cureton was held by officers of all ranks who have enjoyed an opportunity of serving under his command, or been associated with him either on duty or in private life, the Commander-in-Chief invites all so disposed to be in attendance to pay the last honours to this excellent officer, whose decease no officer in the army can more deeply lament than Lord Gough himself."-Mofussilite.

THE PERTAB CHUND PLOT.

The following are the particulars of the "plot" for the proposed massacre and plunder of Calcutta. The mode in which it was intended to be carried out was by seducing the native troops at Barreckpore and Dum-Dum, and, on a particular night, to be fixed for the purpose, they were to make a combined excursion upon Calcutta, and, with the co-operation of other allies in the Burra Bazaar and elsewhere, carry out their work of murder and pillage. For the last two months emissaries were busy in the cantonments at Barrackpore and Dum-Dum. It appears that these agents, during that time, could effect little more than just broach the matter, and that only to the native officers, intending that if their minds could once be poisoned, it would be a comparatively easy task, through their influence over the sepoys, to get them over also. How Pertab Chund, of Culna notoriety, came to be embroiled in the business, cannot accurately be ascertained; but it is conjectured that, as he is implicitly believed all over the country, by the illiterate classes of natives, to be the real heir to the Burdwan Raj, he is regarded with great reverence by the people generally, and to the present time has exercised considerable influence among them. In fact, it is in the character of the young Rajah of Burdwan, whose musnud has been unjustly wrested from him, that he has managed for so many years, ever since he was abandoned by the Bysack family, to keep up an establishment and retinue, and to pay for the means of bestial dissipation in which he is known to indulge so constantly. The originators of the plot, therefore, are supposed to have made selection of Pertab as a coadjutor to assist in tampering with the troops, both on account of his acknowledged ability to sustain a character, and his influence over the natives generally. The native officers, however, on the proposal being made to them, seem to have been rather startled, and they at length decided on rejecting the offer, and remaining faithful to the Company's nemuck. Acting on this resolution, they communicated the fact to the colonel of the regiment, and, in conformity to a counterplot then arranged, pretended to listen to the emissaries, with a view to draw them out as fully as possible as to all that was contemplated, and all who were concerned. Things went on in this way for some days, when it was determined upon by the authorities to bring the affair to a conclusion at once by the arrest and trial of those implicated. Accordingly, two of the most active emissaries were taken in the lines at Barrackpore, and, from the information furnished by them, Jawan Sing, the reputed agent of the ex-Ranee, and Pertab Chund, appeared to be the most conspicuous personages implicated in the plot. The next arrest was that of Pertab Chund, and some others in his house in Mirzapore. Mr. McCann, the officiating superintendent of police, accompanied by a single European officer, entered the room where Pertab himself sat, in great state, on a kind of elevated seat or throne, and took him altogether by surprise.

He was engaged in writing a Nagree paper, and his first effort, on perceiving his visitors, was to seize a sword, which, with other arms, lay on a table before him, but, after a stout struggle, he was prevented from effecting his object. The other actor in the drama, Jawan Sing, was also taken, in a house in Chorebagan. On getting there, the gate, one of cast iron, was found to be bolted and barred from within. By a stratagem this difficulty was overcome, and in a few minutes Jawan Sing was a prisoner. Connected with this affair there are more or less about twenty persons in the hands of the authorities. Among them there is not a single Sikh, or other individual of the Burra bazaar, against whom nothing has yet transpired calculated to involve them in the conspiracy. Both in the house of Pertab Chund and that where Jawan Sing was taken, a number of Nagree papers have been found, but their contents have not yet been ascertained. -Calcutta Star, Nov. 13.

It was stated, in the evidence given on the Court of Inquiry, that a havildar major of the 16th Grenadiers was visited in his tent by two men, who told him they had something to say to him, and would come again in eight days to say it; at the expiration of that period they returned and said, if he would gain over the regiment, he would perform a great work for his country and his faith, and that a crore of rupees were set aside for the 16th; that there were seven crores of rupees in Calcutta for the seven regi-ments at Barrackpore, and that they should have, besides, two days' plunder of Calcutta. On their departure, the havildar proceeded to the adjutant, who sent him to the colonel, to whom he related the whole affair, and added that he would have arrested the men, but he wished to find out their employers. After another period of eight days, the two emissaries made their appearance, and asked him if he had made any arrangements, and he answered he had gained over a subadar, who had great influence, and to whom he had previously related the whole affair. The subadar came to the tent and said, "This is all very well, but who is your employer? I must see him, and then I can treat." The men consented to take them to his presence, and went away for a time, during which, the whole matter was communicated to the colonel, and orders received to make the visit with the men at all The two officers and a sepoy went down in a boat to the Mint, but refused to go farther that night. They slept at the Mint guard, and in the morning met the men at a shop near Premchunder Mahadeo, and about a quarter of a mile to the southward of Burra Bazaar. They then set out on the Dum-Dum road, and after about half an hour's walk, reached a place where there was a tank and near it a large house. Here they found about five men, and among them one of singular stature, and after some time were admitted to the presence of the Rajah Pertab Chund. The Rajah told them that if they would assist in taking possession of the country, every sepoy would have Rs. 10,000. He informed them that, in November, two regiments would descend from Nepaul to seize Segolia; that our army would not take Mooltan; that there was one man amongst those in the house who would reign over all India, and that twenty-one rajahs in Bengal were all joined together to annihilate the Feringhia; that emissaries from Lahore were in every city in India, and that the Nepalese and other native powers were all in the combination. The fort was to be seized, and then Bengal would be theirs. interview closed with a present to the subadar, and a promise that the men should again visit them in eight days. The whole was reported to the colonel, and on the arrival of the emissaries they were put in arrest, and orders despatched to seize Pertab Chund.

Lieut. Edward Forbes, of the 19th N.I., has been dismissed the service for beating a burkundaz and appearing drunk before a Court of Inquiry. He was also charged with receiving stores a Court of Inquiry. He was also charged with receiving stores from the cutwal of Tigrah and departing without paying for them, but he was here acquitted, on the ground that payment had not been demanded. The Commander-in Chief confirmed the finding and sentence of the court, but with reference to the last-mentioned charge very properly remarked that it is the duty of every officer to proffer payment whether it be demanded or not. - Hurkaru.

Inscription on a Gun Taken Nov. 7th .- The following is a translation of the inscription, in Persian, on one of the guns taken from the enemy, by the force under Brigadier Markham, on the 7th instant:—" This gun was made by Futteh Mahomed of Lahore, pupil of Ahmed Yar, son of the great Instructor. By order of the Khalsajee (Runjeet Sing) high in power in the province of Mooltan with a thousand contrivances. I. who am named 'Nurzinghaw,' the cloud tearer, and aim at the heads of my enemies arrows like flashes of lightning, by the assistance of the superior skill of Ahmed Yar, came forth like burning fire, and in the Hindoo year 1878, I was ready for the destruction of my enemies.'

SALE OF UNION BANK ASSETS.—The third sheriff's sale of Union Bank assets took place at the Commercial Sale-rooms on the 4th of December, the lots consisting of four indigo factories (Meergunge, Buwarsh, Bowsing, and Cootooreah), and sundry debts due to the bank. The total amount realized was about a lakh and sixty or seventy thousand,-but more than half of the purchases, it is understood, were made by or on account of the executive committee, acting in protection of the assets. title to the property sold, in many cases, was involved in dispute, and as the sheriff only sells the "right, title, and interest" of the bank, whatever it may be, the purchaser may sometimes get a good bargain, and may sometimes get nothing whatever for his money! This was illustrated by the first lot-the bank's interest (about six annas) in the valuable factory of Meergunge—which sold for only Rs. 10,000. The Committee had in fact already sold the bank's interest for about Rs. 80,000 to Messrs. Kelsalls and Co., so that the purchaser (if a hostile party) would have had a suit or two on his hands immediately. To avoid all contest, and clear the title, the committee purchased it themselves at the sheriff's sale. Some of the other lots were also sold subject to probable litigation. The whole of the secutities, for instance, relating to Carr, Tagore and Co.'s estate, were stated in the continuous parties and likely and and like were stated in the cautionary notices published on the part of that firm before and at the sale, to have been already included in the bank's settlement of accounts with them. It was alleged, therefore, that the sheriff (having already sold the bank's judg-It was alleged, ment against Carr, Tagore and Co.), was in effect selling the same claims twice over. Several of the securities were nevertheless sold to outside parties, and in some cases for substantial The purchasers, therefore, will have to try the question with the trustees of Carr, Tagore and Co.-Ibid., Dec. 5

MR. Quin.—A letter from Camp, Mooltan, says: "Mr. Quin, who has been now some time with Major Edwardes, and whose conduct has been most gallant in the various encounters, was struck by a cannon-ball in repulsing the enemy from their trenches, and has had two ribs broken and the flesh torn away; no danger is apprehended."

LETTER OF MOOLRAJ.—The Mofussilite publishes the following as a translation of the original letter (in Persian) addressed by Moolrai to General Whish :-

-to the High and Virtuous Lord, &c., General Whish Moolrai-

Saheb Bahadoor—may the Almighty protect him! 25th Katuk (8th Nov.), Sumhut 1905, Christian 1848.

"Earnest is my desire for the honour of an interview. In this desire I will relate the thought of my mind. I have received your desire I will relate the thought of my limit. I have tecevisely our letter, in which I am invited to send for the body of Hurry Sing, and accused of outraging the body of Agnew Saheb. To this there are three heads of reply—First: All are equal before God, and God is above all. It is written in history that God raised Alexander and Darius and other conquerors from low state to empire. If it is God's Darius and other conquerors from low state to empire. If it is God's pleasure, the insignificant ant may overcome the furious elephant. In God's goodness is my hope. Second: What is the religion that first seized, outraged, and wounded Lala Longa Mull,* then cured him of his wounds for the purpose of hauging him? From Agnew Saheb, after I had submitted in all things and delivered up to him my fort, I received nothing but unprovoked outrage up to nim my fort, I received nothing out unprovoked outrage and insult; but God ordained that he should be punished by the hand of a sepoy, by whom he was wounded. If in the mutual assault, which followed, he was cut to pieces, I, as a friend, covered his remains with a silk cloth, and in obedience to the precepts of my religion, I buried him according to the forms of his, and reported the whole circumstances to Lahore. My vakeel was imprisoned, and my dispatch brought back to me unopened. What was then written is now in my possession to prove that I am blameless. In the history of Princes it is not found that the persons of ambassadors have been outraged. It is a new practice to imprison messengers and heralds. If I wished to retailate, it is in my power to confine the bearer of your letter; but such are not my feelings; and anxious only for your friendship, I have with my own hand given him a present. Such prisoners as have fallen into my hands have been well treated, cured of their wounds, and dismissed. Whatever may have been said or written by English gentlemen may by inquiry be fully and satisfactorily explained. If Hurry Sing's body is burnt by Hindoos it is sufficient. If not, it is written in my religion that he who dies in battle requires no funeral honours. My last will is that you will consider me a friend and write me friendly letters." and insult; but God ordained that he should be punished by the hand letters."

DISTURBANCE AT ALLAHABAD .- The Hindoos and Mussulmans of this city got up a small row among themselves on the night of the 23rd ult.; and though it originated in fanaticism, it ended without the destruction of life; a good deal of blood, however, was shed on the occasion. The Hindoos, in order to celebrate the festival of Burut Millow with éclat, had erected stages for illuminating the road from Khoordabad to the Chowk. Intermediately was situated a Mahomedan musjid, to the Moulvee of which, the arrangements of the Hindoos gave particular offence, and the Mahomedans in general, taking it as a wanton insult to their religion, were prepared to resent it at the time of the procession. The Hindoos, in order not to be the breakers of peace illegally, petitioned Mr. Money, the magistrate, to decide as to their right to the road-way for their ceremonies. The magistrate, on inquiry, found that Hindoo processions had not previously gone through that, road, and therefore issued an order forbidding the innovation. The Hindoos, however, not satisfied with this decision, appealed to the commissioner, Mr. Lowther, who expressed an opinion contrary to that of the magistrate, stating that it was a "shah-ra," that the Hindoos had a right to its use freely, and that the Mahomedans had no exclusive privilege to interfere. On the night of the 23rd, as the Hindoos were proceeding in procession, and had arrived opposite the musjid, a number of Mussulmans, crying "Ulli Ulli," fell upon them with drawn swords, cut down some of the bearers of the images and others in the crowd, and also the wife of Mr. Collins, the band master. Mr. R. Money was on the spot at the time and assaulted; his horse was struck on the head with a stick, but he himself escaped injury. Since the row the bazars have been closed, and the native public mind is described as being in a state of ferment bordering upon frenzy. - Mofussilite,

We are in receipt of further particulars regarding the disturb-ance at Allahabad. The nature of the quarrel is an awkward one, and it will require much prudence and judgment to bring the affair to a satisfactory termination. The extreme paucity of troops ought to be a warning to government as to what might happen were there any general inclination on the part of the people to shake off the yoke of the foreigner. Such is, however, fortunately not the nature of the present disturbance. A detachment of the 18th Royal Irish had fortunately arrived on the 4th inst., and their presence will have a most beneficial effect on the disturbers of the peace. - Delhi Gaz., Dec. 6.

Brother-in-law of Moolraj—said to have been sent on a mission to Ed-aries—wounded, cured, and hanged in Edwardes' camp.

MESSRS. SAUNDERS, MAY, FORDYCE, AND CO.—A circular has been issued by the trustees of the above firm, from which we learn that the immediately available assets having been realized and distributed among the creditors, it has been resolved that the estate should be wound up in the Insolvent Court.

Policy Pursued in the Punjar.—The course of events in the Punjab, since the defection of Moolraj, has been deemed an entire condemnation of Lord Hardinge's policy. That he was over-confident of its success and of its permanence, there can no longer be any doubt. The expression he was so fond of repeating, that there would not be a shot fired in India for the next seven years, is remembered by his friends only as affording another example of the vanity of human wishes, and it is repeated by his enemies in the hope of increasing his mortification. But may not his Lordship with good reason impugn the justice of this decision, and the fairness of charging disasters on his policy, which have arisen out of a departure from it? May he not affirm that he never expected the Punjab to remain quiescent, except as we showed ourselves able and determined to nip revolt in the very bud? May he not bring forward the fact that he endeavoured to maintain peace by a constant preparation for war, and that in the case of Cashmere and Kangra he showed how he would have dealt with Mooltan? May he not refer, and with effect, to the period of his own and Col. Lawrence's administration, and maintain that his policy worked admirably while they continued in India, and that it has failed only since new councils were adopted; and not only was a revolt allowed to remain unpunished for six months, but the officer who endeavoured to check it was left for months to his own resources, without the least attempt to support him?—Friend of India, Nov. 13.

Ma. D. H. Williams, together with Mr. F. B. Jones, his coadjutor on the geological survey, fell victims to jungle-fever in the field of their labours on the 15th inst. at Hazareebaugh. Mr. Williams had had a fall from his elephant, but suffered so little in consequence, that he continued his survey duties for three days after the accident. He then became ill, and was removed from his camp to Hazareebaugh. He was sent out to this country by the Court of Directors, as mining surveyor to the Government, on the strong recommendation of Sir Henry de la Beche, by whom he had been selected as a person in every way qualified to examine the resources of our Indian coal fields. He was bred a practical miner, but was early in life taken in hand by Sir Henry de la Beche, under whom he served for many years, first in the geological department of the Ordnance Survey of Great Britain, and subsequently in the Geological Survey itself, when geological researches were made a distinct branch of the public service. Sir Henry, in his reports, has more than once taken care to acknowledge the aid which the survey derived from Mr. Williams's acquaintance with the coal-bearing strata. Mr. Williams arrived in Calcutta early in 1846, and commenced immediately a course of active labour in the field, which lasted, with but few intermissions, till the day of his death. We believe our Government never had a more untiring servant, - one who was more disposed to shorten, as much as possible, those periods of inactivity which in India are more or less inseparable from labours which have to be carried on in the fold. ried on in the field. The public has heard little or nothing of Mr. Williams's labours, as his reports have never been printed; why, we cannot say. Mr. Williams leaves a wife and family in England unprovided for; and, as he has died in the service of his country as truly as any soldier who ever fell in the trenches, we hope that the Court of Directors will look upon this case as one that calls for a pension.—Hurkaru, Nov. 21.

The Governor-General, through his private secretary, in a letter to the Rev. K. M. Banerjes, explained that a supposed recent exclusion of native gentlemen from the Governmenthouse levee arose from a misapprehension of his orders; adding: "Since his arrival in India, the Governor-General has endeavoured at all times to evince his readiness and his desire to receive, on public occasions and entertainments in Governmenthouse, native gentlemen and officers, both civil and military: both now and hereafter, as well in the provinces as at the capital, his Lordship will be happy to receive all the subjects of her Majesty, whether European or native, whose position in society. and whose reputation and character, are such as to entitle them to admission, according to the ordinary usage of such occasions; and hereafter the Governor-General will see that the terms of the notification of his receptions shall provide against doubt, and shall prevent the possibility of gentlemen being subjected to the mortification which must necessarily have been felt on the late occasion, and the occurrence of which his Lordship again desires to regret."

IN THE SUPREME COURT, on the 14th November, Mr. H. T. Raikes, the judge of Midnapore, obtained a verdict, with Rs. 1,000 damages, against Mr. W. H. Young, a respectable indigo-planter and zemindar in that zillah, for an anonymous libel, published in the Englishman.

APPAIR OF SOORAJ-KHOOND.—The following is the General Order issued to the Army of the Punjub on the intelligence arriving at head-quarters, Camp Kussoor:—"The Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief has this day received intelligence from Major gen. W. S. Whish, c.B., commanding the first division of the Army of the Punjub, and at Mooltan, of an ably-planned and brilliantly-executed attack made by a portion of the troops under the major-general's command, led by Brigadier F. Markham, on the morning of the 7th inst., on a strongly-entrenched position, which the enemy in great force had taken up, within a short distance of the British camp. The enemy was completely routed, with the loss of several hundreds killed, and seven of the eight guns he had brought into the field were captured by our troops. The conduct of all ranks employed on the occasion is described to have been most meritorious, and while offering to Major-gen. Whish, the officers and men under his command, the tribute of his best thanks for the excellent service they have rendered, his Excellency desires to congratulate the Army of the Punjab on the gallant achievement of their comrades at Mooltan."

HE deterioration in the value of property in Bengal is exemplified by the price realized at public auction for the Bagonharrie indigo concern. This concern, having a cultivation of 9,000 begahs, half ryuttee and half neez, comprising eight factories in good working condition, well found in stores, and with some 400 head of plough cattle and an elephant, as well as Rs. 70,000 of outstanding balances, realized Rs. 10,100 by public auction, or something like a tenth of what was considered its value twenty The average out-turn of this concern for the last ten years ago. years is about 360 maunds from a cultivation of 9,000 begahs, and the cash outlay is stated at Rs. 38,000, or a trifle over Rs. 100 per maund, exclusive of interest on block and outlay, agent's commission and charges, brokerage, &c., which, when added on to the outlay, will leave little or no return to the planter for all his labour and anxiety, at the existing prices of indigo. - Cal. Star, Nov. 9.

Government has ordered a large supply of chloroform for the use of the medical department of the force assembled at Roree.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Noeewalla, November 21st, 1848.—It having been found necessary to form a reserve force in the Sirhind division, which it may be expedient to support and strengthen from the Meerut division, his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief, with the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, is pleased to appoint Major-General Sir Dudley St. L. Hill, K.C.B., to command the reserve, exercising at the same time a general control for all purposes of service over the troops in the Sirhind and Meerut divisions.

The usual reports and returns of the Sirhind and Meerut divisions will be made to the officers in immediate command of those divisions respectively, but the whole of the troops of both these divisions will obey all orders issued by Major-general Sir Dudley Hill.

The major-general will take up and remove his head-quarters from time to time to such points as he may deem best calculated for the attainment of the object in view.

The following corps are directed to continue progress to the Meerut and Sirhind division, in accordance with routes which the quarter-master-general of the army will furnish:

H. M.'s 18th royal Irish.

17th, 19th, 58th, 60th, 61st and 62nd regiments of native infantry.

The 3rd infantry brigade is transferred from the 2nd to the 4th division.

H. M.'s 61st Foot is transferred from the 9th to the 8th brigade.

The command of the Punjab division will be exercised, until further orders, by Brigadier H. M. Wheeler, c.B., with the rank of brigadier-general, so long as he may be in the performance of this duty.

Captain F. W. Burroughs, deputy assistant adjutant-general of the Punjab division, will proceed immediately to join Brigadier-general Wheeler.

Ensign G. R. Wheeler, of the 1st regiment of native infantry, is appointed aide-de-camp to Brigadier-general Wheeler.

The 9th brigade of infantry, and the artillery and cavalry, composing the force now under the command of Brigadier-general Wheeler, are struck off the strength of the army of the Punjab.

Brigadier-general Wheeler will exercise the command of the Jullender district, in conjunction with that of the Punjaub divi-

Captain D. C. Keiller is appointed deputy assistant adjutantgeneral of the 4th infantry division.

Lieutenant C. S. Weston, of the 36th regiment of native infantry, is appointed major of brigade to the 8th infantry brigade.

Deputy Assistant Quarter-master-general Lieutenant J. S. Paton is directed to join army head-quarters, and report himself to the quarter-master-general of the army.

Lieutenant-colonel C. M. Carmichael, c.B., is removed from the 3rd to the 4th regiment of light cavalry, and Lieutenantcolonel H. L. Worrall, on leave, from the latter to the former

Captain J. Clarke, of the 25th regiment of native infantry, having obtained the sanction of the agent to the Governor-general, Scindiah's dominions, to relinquish his appointment of officiating 2nd in command 2nd infantry Gwalior contingent, is directed to join the corps to which he belongs.

By order of his Excellency the Right Honourable the Commander-in-chief.

PAT GRANT, Lieut.-Colonel, Adjutant General of the Army.

Head Quarters, Camp, Nov. 27, 1848.—The Commanderin-Chief has now received a report from Brig. gen. Campbell, c.B., detailing particulars of the affair of the 22nd inst. The brigadier general expresses his approbation of all the troops engaged on the occasion, and dwells in terms of high admiration on the brilliant charges on the enemy's cavalry, in numbers between 3,000 and 4,000, and of H.M.'s 3rd and 14th light dragoons, and the 5th and 8th cavalry.

In one of these charges a handsome Sikh standard was captured, and the standard bearer slain by a trooper, Elius Khan, 1st troop, 5th light cavalry. The claims of that brave young soldier to admission to the Order of Merit will be duly investigated by a consolidated committee, which the officer commanding the cavalry division will be so good as cause to be assembled.

The Commander-in-Chief was a witness of the brilliant conduct of these several corps, and of the intrepid manner in which they were led by their officers, the enemy was signally overthrown on every occasion, and only saved from utter annihilation by their flight to the cover of their guns, on the opposite bank of the river.

By the death of Brigadier general Cureton, c.B., Lieut. col.

Havelock, H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, and Capt. Fitzgerald, of the same noble regiment, the service has sustained a loss which the Commander-in-Chief will unite in lamenting.

The officers and men wounded on the occasion are doing well, the Commander-in-Chief is happy to think, and though the very severe injury sustained by Lieut. col. Alexander, 5th cavalry, and Brevet capt. Riley, of the same corps; Capt. R. H. Gall and Lieut. McMahon, of the 14th dragoons; Lieut. J. H. Holmes, commanding 12th irregulars; and Ensign Hardinge, extra aidede-camp to the Commander-in-Chief, must for a long time render these gallant officers unfit for duty. His Excellency trusts that they will be eventually restored to the service whose honour and character they have so nobly sustained.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CIVIL FUND. - Messrs. W. H. Babington, R. A. Bannerman, J. C. Scott, and W. C. Ogilvie, have accepted annuities from the Civil Fund.

MAJOR-GEN. L. B. LOVEL will, it is said, be appointed to the command of the Presidency division in the place of Major-Gen.

Sir E. K. Williams, about to proceed to Europe.

SUPERINTENDING ENGINEER'S DEPARTMENT .- We learn that a Court of Inquiry, composed of Major-Gen. Sir E. K. Williams, K.C.B. and K.C.T. and S., as president, and Lieut.-Cols. Messeter and Hewitson as members, assisted by Capt. J. C. Boulderson, deputy judge advocate-general, has been ordered to assemble in the Fort on the 21st November to investigate circumstances connected with the superintending engineer's department, presidency division. - Speciator.

MANUFACTURE OF POTTERY AT CHINGLEPUT .- Dr. Hunter, of Chingleput, writes:—"This heavy rain has thrown us back a little in the building of our large glazing furnace, which was very nearly completed, but the upper half of it has given way, and I fear more of it will have to be pulled down so as to build it up Yesterday's gale blew down all the scaffolding, again securely. Yesterday's gale blew down all the scaffolding, which in its fall loosened the large stones on the outside that supported the lining of fire-bricks. We are getting on with the erection of all apparatus for the pottery, and hope soon to have a variety of articles fit for exhibition. At present we are washing clays on a large scale on a new principle, which succeeds admirably. I took the idea from the operations of nature on the banks of large rivers. I find the process a great saving of labour, and particularly applicable to the manufacture of seggars, or oval for enclosing our wares in whilst being fired or glazed; we require 400 or 500 of them to fill our furnace, so it will be some time before we get them all ready. We have a very good bed of clay for making them about three miles from Chingleput. It is like the Stourbridge clay of England, and covers some miles of country. It was accidentally cut through by the natives in dig-ging a drain to convey the river water about two miles inland. The drain is about seven feet deep and fourteen wide, and has not reached the soil below, so it is sufficient to keep the whole of India supplied with fire-bricks and seggars for the next century, should there be a demand for such commodities."-Athenæum.

Mr. Burgass, barrister-at-law, has been appointed sheriff of Madras for the ensuing year.

THE 28TH N.I. has arrived at Khyouk Phyoo.

Hyderabad. - A new administration has commenced at In consequence of the question which was raised Hyderabad. by General Fraser, regarding the dismissal of Suraj-ool-Moolk, Rusheed-ool-Moolk was deputed, on the 20th instant, to announce to him, Syf Jung accompanying him, that Suraj-ool-Moolk was dismissed, and that Syf Jung would be shortly appointed.

It is reported that the installation will take place on the 23rd instant.

Very little is known of Syf Jung as a public man, but it is to be hoped that the Nizam, who has by this time ascertained the evils proceeding from a disorganized state of affairs, and has been warned against the effects of their continuance, by an explicit declaration from the Supreme Government that it would interfere, if it were found absolutely necessary, to introduce order, has made a good selection.

The time of probation will not now be long, nor will circumstances admit of it-progression downwards, gaining increased rapidity at every step.

There is great alarm in the city, lest there should be a renewal of the scenes of last year, but the mastery of the Soogees and the subjection of the Sheahs were too complete to admit the belief that offence would be given by the latter; but fears are entertained lest the bigot Sonites should inflame their own sect, by forging proclamations for the Sheahs. Numerous Sheahs or Shiites are quitting the city to find protection at the Residency. It may be no over-cautious measure, to guard the Residency from an irruption of inflamed bigots. - Spectator.

DR. MURPHY.—A letter from Mr. Elliot, Government secretary, Bengal, addressed to Dr. Carew, Archbishop of Bengal, in reply to his letter to the Governor-General, inclosing a memorial from Dr. Murphy, regarding the order for his removal from the territories of the Nizam, states: - "His Lordship has had under his consideration the whole of the proceedings which led to that order, and is satisfied of the necessity of removing from the Nizam's territories three Roman Catholic priests who were concerned in the outrage at Secunderabad: their removal has accordingly been ordered. With respect to Dr. Murphy, he was to blame, but in a much smaller degree than the priests referred to: the Governor-General has therefore modified the order of the Government of Madras for his removal from the Nizam's territories into an order for his removal only from Secunderabad. Dr. Murphy's removal having been received through you, I am directed to request that you will communicate this decision to him, and at the same time warn him that, if such acts should be repeated, or such language held from the pulpit, as appears by the evidence before the Court of Inquiry to have been employed by the priests in Secunderabad, the Government will promptly adopt much more severe and stringent measures in reference thereto."

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to November 7, reached Bombay December 8.

THE LATE ARCHIBALD SMART, Esq., of the house of Ritchie, Stuart, and Co., arrived in India in 1841, and was placed at the head of the establishment, on the temporary return of Mr. Harry Gordon to Europe, a position he quitted on that gentleman's return, and once more resumed on his final retirement from India in 1844. When he accepted the agency of the Austrian Lloyd's Steam Navigation Company, Mr. Smart became Austrian consul. He was a man of good talents, and great uprightness. He had for years been suffering from disease in the liver, to which, at the early age of thirty-four years, he has fallen a victim. To the best of our recollection this is the first death which has for ten years occurred in the very respectable firm we have named; within this space of time the whole partners of some of our houses, and one or more in most of them, have been removed.—Bombay Times, Dec. 6.

Mr. GALE, late second mate of the Rainbow, has published a letter contradictory almost in every particular of Captain Biden's romantic story, in which he (Mr. Gale) figured as the villain. In this case the last story appears the best, since last November to the poor of his own faith.
Sir Jamsetjee Jejeerhoy is said to have given Rs. 60,000

S. S. Dickinson, Esq., has been appointed sheriff of Bombay.

J. P. LARKINS, Esq., has been re-appointed by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop to the office of Registrar of the Diocese of Bombay.

INSTRUCTION AT BELGAUM. - The Bombay Times states that an institution is in process of establishment at Belgaum, for the purpose of instructing the natives, not merely in reading and writing, but of making them familiar with English machines and implements.

MR. N. OLIVER, nephew of the late commodore, has been appointed to act as master-attendant at Bombay, until further LITHOGRAPHY. - We are happy to learn that the idea we have often urged, of extending literature amongst the natives by means of lithographic printing, is now likely to be pretty largely entered on. Capt. G. Wingate at Nassick, Major Le Grand Jacob at Sawunt Warree, and Lieut. Evans at Nimar, have all of late established lithographic presses, and are bringing the limestones of the country extensively into use.

BANK OF BOMBAY .- A. G. Latham, Esq., and Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy have been elected directors of the Bank of Bombay in the room of J. Parsons, Esq., and Cursejee Jamsetjee, Esq., retired by rotation.

THE FORGED NOTES. - The party who endeavoured to pass the forged notes of the Bombay Bank into circulation has been condemned to twelve months' imprisonment, a very lenient sentence considering the nature of the crime.

THE 17TH N. I. are to move from Dharwar to Kolapore, from which latter station the 14th have been withdrawn to Poona to supply the place of the 1st grenadiers.

quarters at Bombay.

THE 4TH N.I. from Kolapore have reached Poona.

THE PASSENGERS BY THE AJDAHA have sent in a memorial to Government on the disgraceful condition of the commissariat department. This is the first complaint of any moment we have heard of under the contract system. It is quite right, of course, that the contractors should be compelled to provide suitably for the passengers; on the present occasion there is the excuse that the Ajdaha was not expected to be employed to bring down the mails at this time at all, and that the number of passengers on board was twice as great as was expected.—Bombay Times.

NAVAL.--The experimental squadron, consisting of the sloop Clive, schooner Mahi, cutter Margaret, and pattimar Pounah, returned to harbour on the afternoon of Dec. 5. They had been a week. H. M.'s frigate Melampus (42), Captain J. Campbell, and brig Albatross, Commander A. Farquhar, came into harbour on the same day; the former from China, the latter from Honore. Both vessels saluted the castle on their arrival, and were complimented from the battery in return. The Albatross sailed for Hong Kong on the 10th Dec.

27<sub>TH</sub> N.I.—The H. C. steamer Atalanta started on the evening of the 5th Dec. for Kurrachee, with the remainder of the 27th N.I., the 6th company 4th battalion artillery, and a detail of the 8th foot.

1st Grenadiers.—The head-quarter wing 1st grenadiers, consisting of five European and twelve Native commissioned concers, and four hundred and thirty-eight non-commissioned rank and file, reached the Presidency for garrison duty on Sunday and Monday the 3rd and 4th Dec.

THE HEAD QUARTERS WING OF THE 17th N. I. was to start on the 2nd Dec. from Dharwar for Kolapore, and would reach its destination about the 19th. The left wing was to follow on the 7th, on the arrival of the wing 3rd M. N.I., which had left Kulladghee on the 29th Nov., and were expected at Dharwar about the 5th Dec.

THE 14TH N. I. was to leave Kolapore for Poons on the 14th Dec., on being relieved by the 17th.

CHINA.

The Pekin (steamer), with the London Mail of Sept. 25, arrived at Hong Kong Nov. 26.

Hong Kong continued healthy, and the weather has been very yourable. The Governor is recovering from the accident he met favourable.

At Canton all remained quiet.

The Chinese inquire what will be done on the 1st of April, as it is very certain the gates will not be opened; and Seu, it is said, has declared this, if not intimated it officially to the British envoy. Certainly there will not be another foolish expedition ending in nothing, and produced by as little. In the meantime America is concentrating a strong force in this quarter. A corvette of 1,000 tons, carrying 28 heavy guns, and a sloop of 16 guns, are here. A line-of-battle ship of 110 guns, and a steam frigate, are shortly expected, and another sloop is talked of.

The pacificator, Keying, is in high favour with the emperor at Pekin, which is so far favourable to the amicable adjustment of a vexatious question; but the emperor has little control over the Canton people, and in a matter where their passions and prejudices are concerned, they will not be controlled. Keying became unpopular from an alleged partiality to foreigners, and the Government recalled him, as it is their invariable policy to conciliate the people. Seu is a very different man: a thorough Chinese patriot, he longs to return to the old system of degrading foreigners and treating them as inferiors.—Friend of China, Nov. 29.

CEYLON.

The following is an extract of a letter from the interior of Ceylon:—"We are all quiet here at present; the property in the districts where the rows took place (belonging to the natives) is now being confiscated, and the men are all to be turned out, and made to work upon the roads; that is what they have gained by the rebellion, which has nearly ruined all our plantations, where labour is so scarce, that many are giving ninepence per Many persons have gone to the coast to procure men; but the revolt has frightened the Malabars, and prevented their coming over."

From the coffee districts we learn that coolies are still very scarce, and only dropping in by small parties in charge of Euroeans or Cangans, who had gone to their country. It appears that they have required large advances—in many cases three to four rupees each, and at least three rupees-besides the dhony and road expenses. This is a heavy drag on the planter, especially those themselves requiring advances on crops, and many who have gone or sent ten to twenty pounds, which used to be enough to get together 90 to 100 men, will be greatly disappointed this year by their people returning with only twenty or thirty. - Observer, Oct. 30.

SIA M.

The progress which the Siamese, within the last ten or twelve years, have made in the art of shipbuilding, principally through the spirited exertions of individuals connected with the royal family or the court, has been very great and successful, as is proved by the number of fine vessels now afloat which have been turned out at the royal dockyards in Siam. The crowning achievement of this important art has just been accomplished by one of the royal family, who has constructed and launched a small steam vessel, which works satisfactorily, and who is about to undertake the building of another on a larger scale. the highest degree gratifying to find the princes of such a valuable and important country as Siam thus giving the best proofs of their attachment to, and appreciation of the advantages of civilization, in their successful imitation of some of the most useful and important inventions of modern ingenuity, and most useful and important inventions of the country, that she should proceed such men amongst her nobles. The following should possess such men amongst her nobles. extract from a communication from Bangkok, under date the 14th ult., will furnish some account of the Siamese steamer, and its royal and truly illustrious builder. It is to be hoped that his highness's example will be followed by many of his countrymen, and that the cultivation of European literature, arts, and sciences and that the cultivation of European interature, arts, and sciences, may be promoted and aided by the success which has attended the attempt in the case of Prince T. N. Chau Fa:—

"Some time since it was intimated that his Royal Highness Prince T. N. Chau Fa Khromakhun Isaret Raugsan had commenced the construction of a small steam engine. This, under the most indefatigable and persevering exertions on his part, has at length been completed, and the Siamese can now boast of having running on the Menam a steam-boat, every portion of which has been made and manufactured here, and entirely by native artificers. She is 26½ feet long. 3 feet 10½ inches broad, the engine being two-horse feet long, 3 feet 101 inches broad, the engine being two-horse power. This little phenomenon has made several trips up and down the river, the prince generally acting as steers man himself, in full view of thousands of astonished and admiring spectators, who crowded the banks of the river on each occasion. The prince is, passed up and down in the front of the palace with her before the King of Siam, who passed the highest encomiums on his ingenuity, made him a munificent present, and honoured him with his com-mands to have another steam vessel constructed, sufficiently large to be capable of proceeding to Singapore, which his Highness has undertaken to accomplish. From not having copper or iron here of sufficient thickness, the boiler has been constructed in such a manner as to add very considerably to its weight, and in consequence detracting much from the speed of the boat. His Highness expects, to be enabled to rectify this in some measure, to effect which he has commenced building a boat on quite a different model, more buoyant than the present one, and with larger paddle-wheels, and he has sent to Singapore to have copper sufficiently thick for new boilers brought up. The workmanship of even the most minute part of the engine itself is truly admirable, and reflects the greatest part of the engine test in the state of the and by workmen all self-instructed, being his Highness's body servants and retinuc. A few years since and no iron work could be done here but of the coarsest and simplest description; but at predone here but of the coarsest and simplest description; but at present, under the auspices of this prince, work of this kind can be turned out nearly, if not quite, equal to that made in England. His machine and work-rooms are well worthy a close inspection, and it is a source of much gratification to him to exhibit them to Europeans who visit him at his palace. His knowledge in these branches has been principally acquired from books, of which he has a large and well-selected library, which he takes the greatest care of, and derives much pleasure from. There is nothing almost he turns his mind to which he does not accomplish, however irksome and difficult. Amongst other things, he has directed his attention to chemistry, in which science he is no mean proficient. Ship-building he is also conversant with: military and naval tactics, gunnery, naviis also conversant with; military and naval tactics, gunnery, navigation, the use of nautical and astronomical instruments of all kinds, he is thoroughly acquainted with; indeed, were all his acquirements to be commercated, it would be scarcely credited by parties unacquainted with the versatility of his genius. He is at present busily occupied in the erection of a handsome brick dwelling-house, entirely after the European style, which promises, like every thing else he undertakes, to approach towards perfection. A large garden in the same style is attached, and is in progress of being laid out la divisions, flower-beds, fountains, &c. &c. His Highness has already commenced models for the new steam angiest as that are long some commenced models for the new steam-engine; so that ere long you must not be surprised if you see a Siamese steam-boat steaming into the reads of Singapore .- Singapore F. P., Oct. 19.

LITERARY & SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Some curious particulars, relating to the history and religious tenets of the Sikhs, are contained in the Dabistan, the author of which work (whether Mohan Fani, as Sir Wm. Jones and other Orientalists suppose, or some other) lived in the seventeenth century, and expressly states that he was personally acquainted with Har-Govind, the sixth Guru of the Sikhs, and that his successor, Har-rayi, the seventh Guru, was his "great fitend." He enjoyed, consequently, excellent opportunities of knowing the character and opinions of the early Sikhs, of whose origin he gives pretty nearly the same account as is found in Sir John Malcolm's Sketch, derived from materials collected by him and Dr. Leyden from Sikh authors, who wrote in the Punjabi and Dogur dialects.

The author of the Dabistan says of Nanak, the founder of the Sikh faith, that his poems "are, as it were, perfumed with devotion and wisdom, and still more can be said of his speeches about the grandeur and sanctity of God;" and he quotes a passage in one of the poems, showing the Catholicity of Nanak: "Whoever devotes himself to the veneration of God, whatever road he may choose, will come to him:

Be true and thou shalt be free; Truth belongs to thee, and thy success to the Creator.

The author records a variety of incidents in the history of Har-Govind, which escaped Sir John Malcolm. This Guru, he says, was always "attached to the stirrup of the emperor Jehangir," who, however, imprisoned him in the fort of Gwalior for twelve years, on account of an act not very creditable to the Guru's integrity,—his appropriating the pay due to the army. Whilst he was in prison, the Sikhs used to "come and bow before the walls of the fort," and at length, moved by pity, the king gave him his liberty. After Jehangir's death, Har-Govind entered the service of Shah Jehan, and subsequently attached himself to Yar Khan, a eunuch, who held the office of foujdar in the Punjab, whom he assisted in the administration. At a later period, he seems to have revolted from Shah Jehan, and lost all he possessed in the war, besides incurring great trouble and danger. Amongst the remarkable sayings of Har-Govind, recorded by this author, are the following:

Being engaged in battle, a man aimed a blow at the Guru, who parried it, and struck him with his own blade, saying, That is not the way to use the sword, but thus," with one blow making an end of his adversary. The author states that he remarked to a companion of Har-Govind that the Guru had acted in this matter in strict conformity with his character and office, since, as he was a teacher, he should instruct even an enemy how to strike effectually with the sword. Another anecdote is worthier of preservation. Retiring from the scene of his defeat, he took refuge in the mountainous parts of the Punjab, the inhabitants of which never paid homage to Shah Jehan. They were idolaters, and upon the summit of one of their mountains they had raised an image of the Deva, named Naina (Narayana), whither rajas and other eminent persons made pil-grimages. When the Guru went there, one of the Sikhs, named grimages. When the Guru went there, one of the Sikhs, named Bhairo, who accompanied him, entering the temple, struck off the nose of the idol. The rajas complained to the Guru of this act of impiety, and Har-Govind called Bhairo before him. Sikh boldly denied the deed; but the servants of the rajas tesreplied to the fact, and identified the offender. "Ask the god," replied the Sikh; "if he says I did it, kill me." The rajas, with one accord, exclaimed, "Blockhead, how shall the god speak?" Blairo, laughing, answered, "Now judge who is the blockhead: if the god cannot protect his own face, and cannot even tell the person who has mutilated it, what good can he do you?" The rajas remained silent and confounded; and the author says that, from this time, the disciples of the Guru increased considerably in this mountainous country, as far as the frontiers of Tibet.

He relates that he heard what follows from the tongue of Har-Govind:—A person having desired from him some account of the creation of the world, the Guru replied: "The universe is an appearance without reality, and an unsubstantial manifestation of God, the highest being; and all bodies, as well as gods, are an idle delusion." This doctrine he illustrated by a "story of old times," whence he deduced evidence "that the diversity of forms and of distinct bodies is but an image of existence, and that, in truth, there is but one real being, one worthy of praise, and raised above all others by superlative excellence." This Guru, the author says, in a letter to him, gave himself the title of Nanak; "I saw him," he adds, "in the year 1053 (A.D. 1643), in Kirtpoor."

A great many miscellaneous anecdotes are related by this author which, although some of them are puerile, and none of them have any point, show the implicit deference paid by the Sikhs, even the most distinguished, to the most trivial commands or suggestions of the Guru.

There is one fact mentioned by him which, if it were authentic, would go far to extenuate, or at least account for, the vices of the Sikhs:

"It is related that when Nanak died, two roads opened before his soul; the one led to heaven, the other to hell. Nanak chose the latter, and having descended below, he brought all the inhabitants out of hell. The Almighty said to him, 'These sinners cannot enter heaven; you must return into the world and liberate them.' On that account, Nanak came to this world, and his followers are the former inhabitants of hell; the Guru comes and goes, until that multitude shall have found their salvation."

At a meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, held on the 23rd November, 1818, a paper was read, entitled, Observations on the Grammatical Structure of the Indian Languages," by the Rev. J. Stevenson, D.D. The ulterior object of this paper was to show that the languages of India, from the Himalayas to the southernmost point of Ceylon, and from the Indian Caucasus to the mountains of Assam, are composed almost entirely of two grand elements, the nearest modern examples of which are the Sanscrit on the one hand, and the Tamil on the other. The languages of Northern and Central India have a vocabulary mainly Sanscrit, while those of the Peninsula are radically of the Tamil family. Nevertheless, the grammar and construction of the northern family have, according to Dr. Stevenson, a greater affinity to the Tamil than to the Sanscrit; thus, with other circumstances, tending, in his opinion, to show that India, before the arrival of the Brahmans from the north, was peopled by aboriginal tribes of a race entirely different from the northern immigrants, so that even where corrupted forms of the Brahmanical tongue prevailed, the people who used these new dialects retained the construction of their primitive lan-The northern invaders Dr. Stevenson does not suppose to have been Brahmans alone, but Kshatriyas and Vaisyas also, as it is clearly apparent, from genealogical lists contained in the Brahmanical Purans (which there is no reason to suspect), that all the three chief castes sprang from the same family and inter-married with one another. The author conceives the words of the Brahmanical tongue to have been cast in the mould of the ancient language, so as to form, first, the Pracrit, and then the Hindi; just as Persian and Arabic words, by being in modern times cast into the same mould, have formed the Hindoostani; or as Latin words in Europe, by being modelled by Celts and Teutons according to the laws of their primitive tongues, gave rise to the modern languages of Europe.

A letter from M. D'Abbadie to M. Mohl, dated at Aksum, 17th November, 1847, published in the Journal Asiatique, gives some particulars respecting the country and the literature of Abyssinia, where he has resided for some time. He says he has ascertained the existence of 330 works in Guz (the sacred language of the Abyssinians), of which he has obtained about 200. The only one of these MSS, possessing any interest is an abridgment of the history of John Madabar, which contains some brief particulars respecting ancient Egypt: the rest of the MSS, are mostly religious works. He has a complete copy of the Bible in Guz, and three or four copies of the principal books. M. D'Abbadie has a list of no less than 58 different Ethiopian languages, besides negro tongues and three of the Bask or Dogo nations, whom he assimilates to the Basques of the Pyrennees.

THE LATE DR. YATES, of Calcutta, born of humble parentage, possessed a strong predilection for the study of languages. He acquired Latin in his boyhood, principally through his own unaided efforts, and studied Greek. Shortly afterwards, he applied himself to Hebrew and Arabic. At College his attention was directed to Amharic, and on his arrival in India he learned the Benguli and Sanskrit, to which, a few years later, Hindi, Urdu, and Persian were added, and during his voyage back from England in 1828, he commenced the study of Chinese.

M. Catafago, Chancellor of the Consulate General of Prussia, in Syria, has discovered some Ansarian MSS. of great interest, containing a full account of the religion of the Ansaris,—a singular jumble of Magiism, Christianity, and Mahomedanism, hitherto little understood. M. Catafago has likewise procured an Arabic MS. which treats of the religion of the Ismaelians, and records the history of the "miracles" of Rashed-ed-Deen, the Old Man of the Mountain, in the time of the Crusades.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, January 22, 1849.

THE hottest part of the ensuing Parliamentary campaign (which will probably have opened previous to our next issue) is likely to be that of the estimates; the preparations made by the Financial Reform Association, and the speeches of their missionary, Mr. Cobden, threaten a fierce battle on the votes for the army, navy, and ordnance, which, they tell us, must be reduced even below the model year, 1835, whereby a saving of no less a sum than eight millions would be made in the expenditure.

The arguments and calculations of the financial reformers are plausible, and, holding out the soothing hope of a reduction of taxation, are well calculated to win assent. Let us see, however, the basis upon which they really place the whole question.

We take the exposition of Mr. Cobden, in his speech at Manchester. He, with very little disguise, avows the doctrine, that we should reduce our forces by sea and land, and trust to Providence and the forbearance of other nations for defence against a sudden attack. It is not a reduction of the cost of management, or of excessive expenditure in particular departments, which he has in view; "I will not," he says, "lend myself to a delusion like that. I tell you plainly from the outset, that you must reduce the number of men, you must trust something to Providence, to your own just intentions and good conduct to other nations, and be content with a smaller manifestation of hrute force in the eye of the world." War, he says, is growing out of fashion; it is the interest of nations to be at peace; but if states attack each other, why, he asks, should we interfere? Other nations will not assail us merely because we have reduced our armaments from 18,000,000l. to 10,000,000l. This is the sum of his argument, which resolves itself into these propositions; that it is the interest of all nations to remain at peace, which is undoubtedly true, and that all nations perceive it to be their interest, and are able and willing to pursue it, which is equally false. Mr. Cobden does not seem aware of the incongruity of his own reasoning. "Take it," he says, "at the worst; let the nations of the Continent attack each other; who is coming to attack you if you only let their politics alone?" Surely, if the nations of the Continent attack each other unjustly, they may attack us, without our meddling with their politics. There cannot be a truth more universal and more easily demonstrable, than that "honesty is the best policy;" that it is the interest of all mankind to be just in their dealings with each other; yet knavery flourishes, and will flourish.

If Mr. Cobden and the Financial Reform Association had applied themselves to show that our naval and military establishments were larger than those of other nations, or than the exigency of our vast colonial empire demands, they might probably,—judging from the wholesome suggestions to that effect in the admirable letters signed "Emeritus," which have recently appeared in the Times,—have ultimately effected a diminution of expenditure without prejudice to the strength and efficiency of the services; but the adoption of an impracticable and a chimerical theory as the sole basis of their proposed reforms will render them abortive. "I have proved," Mr. Cobden says, "that the mass of the people on the Continent, like the mass of the people in this country, are favourable to peace and averse to war; and I defy you to show me how any Government or people on the Continent can strengthen themselves, even if they chose to carry on a war of conquest." Therefore,—for such is the inference,—we ought to disarm!

To provide against misunderstandings between states, he proposes to insert stipulations in treaties, which would bind the contracting parties to submit their disputes to arbitration; "that, instead of drawing the sword being the point of honour, to which nations shall resort, it shall be to fulfil honourably the treaty by which the dispute shall be referred to arbitration, and abide honourably by the decision when pronounced." Can any man of common sense believe in the practicability of such a contrivance as this to extinguish war? Can he doubt that, on the contrary, it would multiply the occasions of disagreement and hostility?

The position of this country, in respect to its military and naval establishments, differs materially from that of other nations, which have only their own frontiers to defend; we have extensive, remote, and widely-separated colonies, which require protection. What is Mr. Cobden's reply to this argument? "Our colonies are very able to protect themselves!"

Do Mr. Cobden and his fellow-reformers comprehend British India in this category? Is that possession to be left to the defence of a native army; or is an exception to be made in favour of troops ad libitum if their charge is defrayed out of the East-India revenues,—an army being only an evil when paid for by the people of England? If English officers be, as they are, essential to the efficiency of native corps in India, European troops to act with them in the field are as indispensable; and where are these troops to come from, in an emergency, if the establishments at home are to be reduced to the scale of a disarmament? Sagacious politicians in India know that, strong as the attachment of our native army may at present be, in that native army resides the most formidable element of danger to our power.

War is confessedly a great evil; but, like poverty and disease, it is only to be mitigated; the complicated and conflicting interests of the various races of mankind forbid all hope of seeing it extinguished. And whilst war is possible, he is a visionary who, for the sake of an experiment, would expose such a country as this to the ambition, the injustice, or the sudden caprice of a neighbour.

Captain Lyons has resigned the office of agent for the East-India Company in Egypt, and Captain H. Johnson has been appointed to succeed to that office.

The annuity of £100, granted by the East-India Company to Lieut. Waghorn, R.N., has been increased to £200, in acknowledgment of his services in establishing the overland route communication with India.

THE WILD FLOWERS OF CHINA. — Most people have seen and admired the beautiful Azaleas which are brought to the Chiswick fêtes; but few can form any idea of the gorgeous and striking beauty of these azalea-clad mountains (in China), where on every side, as far as our vision extends, the eye rests on masses of flowers of dazzling brightness and surpassing beauty. Nor is it the azalea alone which claims our admiration; clematises, wild roses, honeysuckles, the beautiful Glycine Sinensis, and a hundred others, make us confess that China is, indeed, the Central Flowery Land.—Fortune's "Wanderings in China."

THE LATE EARL OF AUCKLAND.

Our limits are too penurious to admit a biography of this nobleman; but the incidents of his Indian administration are too remarkable to be passed over with a slight and cursory notice, and its history is, perhaps, the more inviting at the present moment, when the Government of India is engaging in another foreign war.

George Eden, Lord Auckland, was born in August, 1784, and, being a second son, was designed for the Bar, to which he was called in 1809. The death of his elder brother (who was drewned), in the following year, opened to him another avenue into public life. He entered Parliament, and on his father's decease, in 1814, he succeeded to the barony of Auckland. Attached to the Whig party, on the accession of Earl Grey to power, in 1830, he became a member of his Cabinet, with the appointment of President of the Board of Trade, which he exchanged, in 1834, on the resignation of Sir James Graham, for that of First Lord of the Admiralty. The brief administration of Sir Robert Peel, from December, 1834, until April, 1835, removed him from office, and the return of his party to the ministry led to his nomination to the Government of India, under very peculiar circumstances.

On the 16th March, 1834, Lord Wm. Bentinck had tendered his resignation of the office of Governor-General, which the Chairman of the Court of Directors (Mr. St. George Tucker) communicated to the Court on the 27th August. Early in the following month, communications took place between the Chairman and the President of the India Board (Mr. C. Grant, the present Lord Glenelg), the object of the ministry being to procure the appointment of Mr. Grant as Governor-General, and that of the Court to invest Sir Charles Metcalfe with the office. The Chairman resisted the pretensions of the President of the India Board, though backed by all the powers of Government, which, in its turn, by means of the veto, forbade the appointment of Sir Charles Metcalfe as a permanent successor to Lord Wm. Bentinck, laying it down, as a principle, that the office of Governor-General should not be filled by "any servant of the Company, however eminent his knowledge, talents, and expesience," or otherwise than from England,-thus excluding the whole service of India. Pending the discussions between the two branches of the Home Government upon this question, Lord Grey's Ministry was displaced by Sir Robert Peel's, and in January, 1835, the Court of Directors nominated Lord Heytesbury Governor · General, - a nobleman eminently qualified for the office: his Majesty's approval of the nomination was notified on the 5th February, and his Lordship was sworn into office on the 4th March. In the succeeding month, another change of administration took place, the Peel Ministry giving way to the Melbourne, and Lord Heytesbury, who was on the point of taking his departure, was informed that his appointment would be revoked. Accordingly, on the 5th May, a warrant issued under the sign-manual of the King, vacating an appointment which his Majesty had formally approved exactly three The Chairs strongly protested against this months before. almost unparalleled act of party hostility, observing that "the vital interests of India will be sacrificed if the appointments of Governors are made subservient to political objects in this country." Minutes of dissent and protest were recorded by other Directors, Mr. Tucker stamping the act as "an undisguised exercise of an arbitrary power," and as "calculated to degrade the Court in the eyes of their servants and the public." The revocation of Lord Heytesbury's appointment, however, could not pave the way to that of Mr. Grant, and Lord Auckland was selected as a candidate agreeable to both the co-ordinate authorities.

This incident will be a remarkable one to the student of Anglo-Indian history, not only in itself, but for its consequences. Possibly, nay probably, had Lord Heytesbury not lin gered in England, or had his appointment, made and approved, been suffered to have effect, the Cabul expedition might not have taken place, or, under different management, might have had a more fortunate issue; the lives of the thousands, whose bones still whiten the passes between Cabul and Jellalabad, might have been spared, and the millions sterling, wasted in that disastrous scheme, might have already advanced the moral, social, and industrial condition of the masses in India.

Lord Auckland,-who left England at the end of the year 1835, pledging himself, like many other governors, to "promote education and knowledge, improve the administration of justice, and extend the blessings of good government and happiness in India,"-arrived there in March, 1836. In the following year, much uneasiness was felt in consequence of the supposed designs of the Russian Government against British India, evinced by its Eastern policy, and by the conduct of its agents in Persia, Central Asia, and Affghanistan. This uneasiness was aggravated by unequivocal symptoms of a change of feeling towards our rule amongst the princes of India, and even our own subjects, who began to manifest a want of confidence in the permanence of our supremacy, and dark rumours were in circulation in the native courts and in the bazaars, that some undefined calamity was about to visit us in the shape of a mighty expedition from beyond the dreaded Indus. In October, 1837, Lord Auckland left Calcutta for the north-west provinces. The state of British India, the hostile movements of Persia, and the supposed intentions of Russia, formed subjects of deep deliberation to the governing authorities at home and in India, and the result was a determination, announced in the celebrated Simla declaration of October, 1838, to send a British army across the Indas.

We are scarcely yet in a condition to trace with historical precision the true origin of this unfortunate scheme of policy, founded, as it is now well known, as regards Russia, upon misapprehensions,—or fix upon its real author. The credit of the first concoction of the scheme, had it been successful, would probably have been fairly claimed by Lord Palmerston, the Foreign Secretary. The mode in which it was carried into execution being necessarily left to the Governor-General and his advisers, Lord Auckland, as he would be entitled to share largely in its triumphs, must bear some portion, at least, of the odium attending its ill-success, which is attributed to the misconduct of the instruments chosen by himself.

The abandonment by the King of Persia of his abortive designs regarding Herat fortunately narrowed the scope of the army of the Indus to the settlement of Affghanistan. Grave differences of opinion prevailed amongst those whom the Governor-General consulted, as to whether Shah Shooja should be restored or Dost Mahomed Khan upheld. Sir Alexander Burnes advocated one course of policy, Sir C. M. Wade another. Perhaps Lord Auckland chose what appeared at the time the best course—the least of two evils—though experience has reversed that opinion. When he entered upon this bold and hazardous enterprise, he manifested a vigour for which even his friends had scarcely given him credit, and much of its success may be due to the tone and firmness of his directions, and the activity he infused into all branches of the service connected with the expedition.

The chief adviser and the confidential agent of Lord Auckland, in this important transaction, is understood to have been the late Sir Wm. Macnaghten, a man of great talents, well acquainted with the habits and feelings of the people of the East, familiar with their languages, their trains of thinking, their intricacies of action—in short, no European could have been chosen better adapted to work out the policy of the Indian Government in Affghanistan. Had the military arrangements been confided to equally competent hands, the event would doubtless have been far different. The complete success of the scheme was, however, placed beyond our power by uncontrollable circumstances, of which we were previously ignorant,—the universal unpopularity of the Shah, the poverty and disorganization of the country, and the thorough duplicity and treachery of the Afighan sirdars, which rendered it impossible to find men of condition in the country fit to be employed in the administration. When the Kohistani chiefs were summoned to the capital, they bound themselves by the most solemn oaths of fidelity to the Shah, and then proceeded to the house of one Hafisjee, a prime mover of sedition, and took equally solemn oaths to devote their lives and properties to the Shah's destruction!

The catastrophe of this unhappy, impolitic, and disastrous expedition is too recent not to be well known, and too sad to be an inviting topic to dwell upon. Lord Auckland, at the close of his tenure of office, in 1841, left India in circumstances very different from those in which he found it. He had, indeed, dissipated the absurd forebodings respecting the fall of our power,—almost the only advantage gained by the expedition across the Indus,—but a cheerless gloom pervaded all the departments of government, our arms had been disgraced, and our finances were exhausted.

He returned to England, was rewarded with the title of "Earl," and after an interval of four years, was again called to the councils of his sovereign. On the formation of the present Ministry, in 1846, he was re-placed at the head of the Admiralty, the affairs of which he continued to administer until his death with an ability, and an impartiality in the disposal of the patronage attached to it, which justly won for him general praise.

Although the late Earl is not, as already observed, responsible for the gross mismanagement which made the expedition to Cabul "the grave of our treasure, our army, and our national honour," his memory will not escape some share of its disgrace; but, bating this, his Indian administration will bear severe criticism. Malice itself has not breathed a suspicion upon his integrity or his justice; his talents were of a higher order than is commonly supposed; as a public man, he was steady and consistent in his principles, and indefatigable in the discharge of his duties; his private character was amiable, the generous qualities of our nature being found in him embellished by gentleness and suavity of temper, mild and unassuming manners.

He left no son; the earldom is consequently extinct; but the barony descends to his brother, the Bishop of Sodor and Man.

The Musulman Navy, during the middle ages, was inferior to that of the Christians, and was commonly equipped upon an exigency. Many Mahomedans possessed a sort of abhorence for the sea, and some doctors pretended that it was a kind of madness to trust oneself to a frail ship on so terrible an element. In their opinion, a man who embarked on board a ship without absolute necessity should be regarded as an idiot, and his evidence ought not to be received. It is not surprising, after this, that the condition of a mariner was not held in much esteem in the East. Makrizi, who wrote in the fifteenth century, tells us that in his time, in Egypt, the term "mariner" was a term of reproach. It was rendered in Arabic stooly, from the Greek  $\sigma ro\lambda \dot{\eta}$ .—M. Reinaud.

The Caoss-bow, as a weapon of war, appears to have been introduced into Europe after the first Crusades; but several Popes proscribed it, as a "treacherous," weapon, and the Second Council of Lateran (held in 1139) anathematised it, terming the use of the cross-bow "artem mortiferum et Deo odibilem." Nevertheless the church sanctioned the use of this treacherous weapon against heretics and infidels, and the Crusaders did not scruple to employ it in their contests with the Musulmans. Richard Cœur de Lion, witness of the havoc which this weapon made in their ranks at the siege of St. Jean D'Acre, patronised the cross-bow on his return to Europe; and he perished by this weapon, which was considered by some as a just visitation of heaven.

LAW.

COURT OF BANKRUFTCY, JAN. 5.

In the Bankruptcy of Hughesdon and Mackey.—The bankrupts were East-India merchants. Their main place of business was at Chandernagore. This was a meeting for the last examination. The bankrupts, one of whom passed through the Insolvent Court at Calcutta, came over to this country and surrendered to their fiat. The whole of the debts and liabilities amount to about 120,000l., about 50,000l. of which were incurred on bills receivable in the ordinary way of trade. They failed in consequence of the disasters which befel the East-India trade during the crisis. There is about 5,000l. in the hands of the official assignee. An application has been made to the Insolvent Court at Calcutta for the books of the firm, or a transcript of them, so that a balance-sheet may be prepared and filed, but it is not yet known with what success. The meeting was adjourned for two months. Protection granted.

JANUARY 9.

In the Bankruptcy of Allan Gilmore. - The bankrupt was partner in one of the largest mercantile houses in Calcutta, trading under the designation of "Colville, Gilmore, and Co." The house suspended payment during the crisis, and the remaining partners, Messrs. Colville, Pelliam Killigan, and two others, passed through the Insolvent Court at Calcutta. Their joint balance sheet showed debts and liabilities to the amount of 418,792L, but of this 310,965L were secured. The Union Bank of Calcutta was a creditor for a large sum (200,0001, it was said), and a proof on its behalf was attempted upon this estate, but without success. This bankrupt's balance-sheet, upon which he passed without opposition, shows that the private creditors of the bankrupt amount to only 1121. The liabilities are 5,506/.; the property 1,669/.; the capital 2,119/. The cash drawn out of the firm by the bankrupt is mentioned as 1,586%. The balance-sheet commences in June, 1845, and ends in August, 1848. When the Calcutta house failed, the bankrupt came over to this country, and sued out a fiat on his own petition. The certificate was granted without opposition.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Annexation of the Punjab.—The late Mr. Mill, the historian, in his evidence before the Parliamentary Committee on the East-India Charter, justified the seizure and annexation of the Punjab upon a far slighter pretext than is now offered: "I consider," he says, "that we have nothing now between us and the most desirable frontier everywhere but the territory of Runjeet Sing: if we were threatened on the north-west, for example, by an invasion of the Russians, we should, in self-defence, be obliged to take possession of the country to the foot of the hills, as we could not leave an intermediate space in which the enemy might establish themselves."

HAILEYBURY.—The half-yearly examination of candidates for admission into the East-India College, was held at the East-India House on the 11th, 12th, and 13th instant, when, from a list of twenty-seven candidates who were presented for examination, the following were reported duly qualified, viz.:—Messrs. J. R. Arthur, A. H. G. Block, A. Bosanquet; Lord Ulick Browne; Messrs. H. M. Chase, H. W. Dashwood; the Hon. Ashley Eden; Messrs. H. Gonne, W. Lodwick, W. H. Lowe, S. Lushington, P. Malcolm, R. Manderson, A. T. Moore, J. Nairne, R. H. Pinhey, J. A. Pym, W. Le F. Robinson, D. F. Carmichael-Smyth, J. G. Thomason, and H. C. Wake.

Dr. Bowring. — Foreign Office, Jan 10.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint John Bowring, Esq., to be H.M.'s Consul in the city and district of Canton, in the province of Kwangtung.

THE EGYPT PORTION OF THE OVERLAND ROUTE TO INDIA.—
It is stated that Mr. Robert Stephenson is now in Egypt, at the instance of the British Government, to survey and report upon the practicability of making a railway across the Isthmus of Suez.

We some time back referred to the inconveniences sustained by passengers to India, in the Egyptian portion of the overland route, since Mehemet Ali took it into his own hands in 1846, and to the neglect with which all remonstrances were treated. It is satisfactory, therefore, to mention that there are indications of an intention of Abbas Pasha to include amongst the reforms with which he will begin his reign, the improvement in the transit administration which has been so long needed. According so the last advices, it appears that the new Pasha has appointed, with full powers to act without reference to any divan, an intelligent man, named Kenny Bey, to carry out the necessary measures, and as hitherto the reference of all questions to the decision of a committee has been the chief cause of the delays and vexations experienced by the agents of the Peninsular and Oriental Company in their attempts to obtain an amendment of the system, there is reason to expect that the whole business will now be speedily placed on an improved footing. Abbas Pasha has suggested, it is said, that on the first five deep stations of the desert, train-rails should be laid down; and, the rails being already at Alexandria, the work could at once be put in operation. Orders also have been given for the appropriation of six boats for the exclusive use of the service on the Nile, and of one or two others for the port of Alexandria and the canal. - Times.

SIR C. NAPIER. - We are requested to contradict a statement respecting Sir C. Napier's prize-money, which is the reverse of the fact. It is said he received batta in addition to the prizemoney, whereas his batta was deducted from his prize-money by the Directors .- Times, Jan. 13. [Batta is always deducted from prize-money.]

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Phabe has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Madras, and the India and Withamley for the like purpose to Bombay.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,-

BEG respectfully to inform you that it is my intention, on my arrival in England during next spring, to offering myself as a Candidate for the East India Direction.

The grounds on which I hope for the favour of your support I shall have the honour to state in a letter to cach proprietor.

It is my desire to devote whatever experience I may have gained during a course of nearly thirty years of active services, terminating in the distinguished position of Member of the Council of India, to the welfare of this country, in which the bast part of my life has been spent, and the prosperity of which must ever be to me a source of the deepest interest.

I have the honour to be. Ladies and Gentlemen, Your obedient humble servant,

FREDERIC MILLETT.

LANGUAGES. ORIENTAL

HINDUSTANI, PERSIAN, ARABIC, SANSKRIT, &c., TAUGHT, ON MODERATE TERMS,

AT NO. 58. BURTON CRESCENT, FROM 10 A.M. TO 1 P.M.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.,

rofessor of Oriental Languages in the King's College, London; Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland; Member of the Asiatic Society of Paris; and author of the following Works, just published on the HINDUSTANI & PERSIAN LANGUAGES.

DICTIONARY

HINDUSTANI-ENGLISH & ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI.

By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6a.

*g.* This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-O-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes.

By Duncan Forbers, LL.D. 8vo. cloth, 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By Duncan Forbers, LL.D.

Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5s, 6d.

"This work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the Hindustani language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have seniom, if ever, seen such a small pocket-companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come out to India not altogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."—Friend of India, published at Serampore.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. A new edition, carefully collated with original MSS., having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By Duncan Forbers, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth, 15a.

•6 The Bagh o-Bahar is the test-book in which cadets and assistant-surgeons have to pass an examination in India. This edition was prepared under the authority of the Hon. the East-India Company.

GRAMMAR of the PERSIAN LANGUAGE. To which is added, a Selection of Easy Extracts for reading, together with a copious Vocabulary. By Duncan Forders, LL.D. Second edition, greatly improved and considerably enlarged. Royal 8vo. cloth . . . . 12s. 6d.

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR PINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR

OIL—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the human hair. It insinuates its balsamle properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryo state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, austains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Its operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedies have been tried in vain, Rowland's Macassar Oil has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plentude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. A small pamphet accompanies each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and avice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life. Its invaluable properties have obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the whole of the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the civilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the best and surest proofs of its merits,—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words, in two lines,—ROW LAND'S MACASSAR OIL. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,028 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20,

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

EMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS thaving a large interest to maintain in those Colonies), have been advised to make known that they can supply a comfortable OUTFIT, including Bedding, for MALE or Frankle Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, Bishopsoate Strrer within (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote Emigrants, they neither receive from Agents, or pay the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAVAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIDSHIPMEN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the Cabin-Passenger Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, Bishopsgate Strret within), LONDON, and each branch at St. George's Crescent, Liverpool.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind familles whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The London General Mourning Warehouse, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street,—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

WEDDING ORDERS & INDIA OUTFIT'S executed in the first style of fashion at Mrs. NORTON'S Show Rooms, 72. Strand, where an extensive assortment of Ladies' Linen and Under Clothing, Dressing Gowns and Robes a Déjeûner, in muslin, print, silk, and printed flainel, with a beautiful variety of Baby Linen and Children's Dresses, are kept ready made. Youth's and Gentlemen's Shirts made in the neatest style. The Ladies' Registered Equestrian shirt can only be obtained at Mrs. Norton's, 72, Strand, Adelphi.

Orders accompanied with a remittance faithfully executed on the lowest possible terms for ready money.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c.

TUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—They furnish equal pressure in every part, are perfectly porous, and draw on without lacing. Many have attempted to imitate them, by introduction of an article so full of serious defects, as to render this caution to the public necessary. H. and Co.'s Surgical Stockings, &c. are patronized by all the first surgeons in the kingdom. HUXLEY and Co., 5, Vere Street, Cavendish Square.

CHUBBS' LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, and CASH-BOXES.—CHUBBS' PATENT DETECTOR LOCKS give perfect security from false keys and pleklocks, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made of all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied, and are strong, secure, simple, and durable.

CHUBBS' PATENT LATCH, for front doors, counting-house doors, &c., is simple in construction, low in price, and quite secure. The keys are particularly neat and portable.

CHUBBS: PATENT FIRE-PROOF SAFES, BOOKCASES, CHESTS, &c., made entirely of strong wrought iron, so as effectually to resist the falling of brick-work, timber, &c., in case of fire, and are also perfectly secure from the attacks of the most skilful burglars.

CHUBBS' CASH and DEED BOXES fitted with the detector locks. CHUBB & SON, 57, St. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, LONDON.

TO INDIAN SPORTSMEN.

HENRY TATHAM, Gun Maker, 37, Charing Cross, ENRY I ATHAM. GUN MAKER, 3/, Charing Cross, London, begs respectfully to thank his patrons in India for the great encouragement he is receiving in the sale of his Short Musket-bored Double-barrelled Rifle, with a pair of extra shot barrels to fit the same stock, if required, fitted up in a leather case, with the necessary apparatus complete, which are considered by all gentlemen who have tried them to be the most perfect.—Henry Tathan has always on hand a variety of new and second-hand Guns, with all the modern improvements.—Also, Air Guns for shot and ball.

Orders should be accompanied by a remittance, or reference for payment in London.

TULENCY, and AFFECTIONS of the LIVER may be Cured by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Symptoms indicative of these disorders are, a feeling of nauses, distention, and spasmodic pain in the stomach, sense of oppression and sinking after eating, want of appetite, heartburn, languar, dejection of spirits, and general debility. The removal of the cause of complaint is the most important step, for which purpose have recourse to Holloway's Pills, as they possess such cleansing and renovating properties, that the action of the liver is speedily corrected, the redundancy of bile carried off, the stomach strengthened, the spirits revived, and the patient is restored to perfect health.

Sold by all druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS INSTITUTION.

ECONOMICAL RATES OF PREMIUM computed expressly for the use of the Company, and presenting the means of effecting policies in a great variety of ways, to suit the objects and circumstances of the assured. Among others the two following tables are particularly deserving of attention:—

1. A table of rates (No. II.) whereby little more than half the amount of premium ultimately payable upon the policy is required during the first seven years, without any deduction from the sum assured when the policy becomes a claim.

2. An extensive table of more (No. V.)

a claim.

2. An extensive table of rates (No. V.) for reversionary annuities, presenting to husbands, fathers of families, and others, one of the cheapest and been possible modes of securing, in the event of premature death, a provision for the especial objects of their solicitude.

Complete security afforded to the assured by means of an ample subscribed capital—by the registration of assignments of policies—by the admission of age and interest, during life, where the same have been estisfactorily proved, and by other regulations for facilitating the objects and protecting the interests of all bond fide policy holders.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE are still without intelligence of any event of a decisive character in the Punjab, either from the grand army of the Chenab, or from Mooltan. Loud complaints are already made in the journals of the "procrastination" of the contest, and unfavourable omens are drawn from its prolonga-tion by some writers, but surely without much justice. There are yet no symptoms of any general or popular combination against us; the only Sikh army opposed to us in the field retires before the British forces with loss and disgrace, and their commander is understood to be negotiating for terms. True it is that, if our army should sustain a reverse, it might multiply the number of our foes; but a reverse is less to be anticipated by pursuing a wary course of operations, than by undervaluing the courage and discipline of the enemy, and by encountering risks which might be politic or pardonable with Pindarries or even Mahrattas, but cannot be incurred with impunity with such troops as the Sikhs.

The intelligence brought by this mail from the army of the Chenab is to the 22nd December, up to which time no action had taken place since that of the 3rd between Sir Joseph Thackwell's force and Shere Singh, which led to the precipitate retreat of the Sikhs from their intrenched camp on the right bank of the Chenab. Fuller details of that action are now in our possession than were known at the date of our last issue.

It appears that Major-General Thackwell reached Wuzeerabad at sunset of the 1st December, and immediately commenced passing the infantry and artillery across the river in boats, the cavalry being ordered to cross by the ford, helow the ferry; but as this was a hazardous operation in the dark, they bivouacked on the left bank (the other portion of the force being on the right), and crossed in the morning. About two o'clock P.M. the entire force moved towards the enemy's position in front of Ramnuggur, halting for the night, and resuming the march next morning (the 3rd), when, about noon, intelligence was received that the enemy had moved towards them; shortly after, a fire was suddenly opened upon the British division, and an attempt was made to turn our flank, which was checked by the cavalry under Brigadier White. During this movement, the enemy's cannonade was very severe, our artillery not returning it (in conformity to instructions from the Commander-in-Chief not to "engage" the enemy), our infantry lying down to avoid the shot. At length, the Sikh cavalry manifesting a decided intention to attack, Major Christie's troop of horse artillery was brought up between the 3rd Dragoons and the 5th Light Cavalry, and opened their fire with great effect. Still the enemy kept moving to their own left, with an apparent determination to turn General Thackwell's right; but a demonstration of an advance by the 3rd Dragoons, threatening their right, again checked the Sikhs, who were exposed to a destructive fire from our artillery, and suffered severe loss

The instructions of the Commander-in-Chief, which were scrupulously adhered to by the major-general, prevented him from pressing his advantage,—though it is said he had a brilliant opportunity of making a dash and seizing the Sikh guns. At sunset the columns of the enemy retired, and the whole of their army retreated during the night, as stated in the despatch of Lord Gough. The loss of the Sikhs in this affair is represented to have been very great,—according to some accounts 1,000 men,—and Shere Singh is said to have been wounded. Ours was small; no officer was killed: Captain Austin and Lieutenant Watson, of the Artillery; Lieutenant Garstin, 36th N.I.; and Lieutenant Hibbins, of the 3rd Irregulars, were wounded.

Shere Singh appears to have retreated to a strong position at a place called Moong, on the Jelum, having an intrenched camp on either side of the river, termed a "night" camp, and a "day" camp,—the former on the right, and the latter on the left bank. A sketch of his position, drawn from the reports of spies, is given in another column. The country between the Chenab and Jelum is described as covered with so dense a jungle that it is almost impracticable for the operations of either artillery or cavalry; but where Shere Singh could move his heavy guns and horse, we could move Major-General Thackwell followed the retreating enemy, but does not appear to have come up with them, and he encamped at a place named Heyla, 24 miles from the Chenab, and not more than 14 from the new position of the enemy. A salute of from 45 to 50 guns was fired by the Sikhs on the night of the 19th, and was distinctly heard in the British camp.

The Commander-in-Chief does not appear to have moved the force under his immediate command to the right bank of the Chenab until the 18th, and he had not joined the camp of Major-General Thackwell on the 22nd. The 1st and 6th Light Cavalry, with three guns of Capt. Miles's battery, were encamped at Wuzeerabad on the 22nd.

It seems to be the general belief that the policy of the Commander-in-Chief (in compliance with orders from the Governor-General) was to suspend active operations against the enemy until the fall of Mooltan. It is asserted in a letter from the camp at Heyla, that the communications which are passing between Shere Singh and the Commander-in-Chief relate to an offer of the former to give up his guns and munitions of war, on condition of receiving a free pardon. Major Mackeson, who was in political charge with the Commander-in-Chief, is said to have refused to hold any intercourse with rebels in arms, or to listen to any terms but unconditional submission. The British camp seems well supplied, whilst in that of the enemy provisions of all kinds are said to be scarce. The climate of the Chenut Doab is described as delicious, resembling that of the north of Italy in October. The report of Burnes makes this doab "a sterile waste of underwood;" but although a good part of it is covered with jungle, and the country has a wretched aspect in the higher parts, in the lower the pasture is rich, and the banks of the Chenab are studded with numerous hamlets.*

We now turn to Mooltan, upon the fate of which appears to hang the issue of this contest. The whole of the Bombay column,—which was not expected to be able to reach Mooltan before Christmas,—had arrived in camp on the 21st, and preparations were making for the immediate resumption of the siege. General Whish had now 16,000 Bengal and Bombay troops, and the 12,000 allies, under Edwardes and Cortlandt, made the besieging army 28,000 men, with nearly 100 guns. Moolraj had not more than 9,000 men.

Nothing had occurred before that fortress, since the last advices, except the retrograde march of Narrain Singh, who had meditated an expedition to Jhung, but was compelled to return by Emam-ood-Deen, who had been detached to watch his movements. The fort of Mooltan had been twice reconnoitered by the engineers, who had a good look at it, without molestation. On the 18th, the Scinde horse was despatched to Sirdarpore, in the hope of cutting off Narrain Singh, who had not re-entered the fort. The additions to his force had enabled Major-General Whish to check the supplies carried into Mooltan, which consequently began to suffer from the want of grain.

From the Jullundur Doab the intelligence is favourable; the disposition to revolt is pretty well subdued.

Intelligence from Peshawur states that Jubbar Khan, of Cabul, had arrived there with an Affghan force; his object was not known.

Chuttur Singh was still at Peshawur, whence he had written to his son that he had succeeded in coming to an understanding with the Ameer Dost Mahomed Khan.

Attok had not fallen up to the 12th December, and firing had almost ceased on both sides; no impression had been made on the walls.

Major Lawrence had been transferred by Chuttur Singh to his son, Shere Singh, who treated him with the utmost respect and attention. Ever since the war began, indeed, the Sikhs have taken the utmost care not to aggravate hostilities by cruelty or irritation; they have treated all those with kindness who have fallen into their hands, and permitted them all, with the exception of the Lawrence party, to return to their friends.

From the other parts of India, there is little to notice; everything continues tranquil throughout the Company's dominions. The substance of a letter from the Governor-General to the Nizam of Hyderabad has been published, in which his lordship plainly intimates his disapproval of the manner in which matters have been conducted by that prince for a long time past, and suggests the expediency of a speedy reform. The Governor-General was at Lodiana on the 19th ult. It was reported that his lordship intended proceeding to Lahore.

Some rumours were afloat of a further outbreak in Ceylon.

BENGAL.

THE ARMY OF THE CHENAB.

The intelligence from the British Camp at Ramnuggur, Phalia, &c., is very scanty. On the 16th instant, the 1st and 6th regiments of Light Cavalry, accompanied by three guns of Captain Miles's battery, left Ramnuggur under Brigadier A. Pope, C.B., on route for Wuzeerabad, at which place they were encamped on the 22nd. On the morning of the 18th, as had been announced would be the case, the head quarters camp, with H. M.'s 29th, the 22nd, 30th, and 45th regiments Native Infantry, and 9th Irregular Cavalry, crossed the river by the pontoon bridge; a number of spare ammunition waggons, and a spare gun to replace that lost by Lieut.-Col. Lane's troop were at the same time dragged over by manual labour, the bridge, which is generally spoken of as a very wretched affair, being, we presume, unequal to the great additional weight of horses and bullocks. The troops and departments that remained at Ramnuggur on the departure of the Commander-in-Chief were six heavy guns (two 24-pounders and four 18-pounders, but why they should have been left behind, when we were assured they might have been crossed over in boats without much trouble, is beyond our comprehension), three of Capt. Miles's guns, the 13th, 15th, 20th, and 69th regiments of N. I., the 12th Irregular Cavalry, the Field Hospital, Artillery Park, and the Commissariat stores. The Engineers, or at least Capt. Glasford and Lieut. C. B. Young, were hard at work constructing a bridge of boats across the Chenab about a mile above Ramnuggur. They are also throwing up bridgeheads (light field works) to protect the bridge and the regiment that will be employed in looking after the communication. In consequence of a heavy storm that occurred early on the morning of the 19th inst., the Commander-in-Chief was, on the 22nd, still encamped close to the right bank of the Chenab. The heavy thunder and rain (the latter fell in such torrents that umbrellas were in requisition in some of the tents) had contributed to clear the atmosphere and reduce the temperature. The sick and wounded were in general, we are glad to learn, doing well. Some cases of smallpox had, however, broken out in camp, and we regret to have to announce the death, on the 19th, of Ens. Hillier, of the 20th Nat. Inf. - From the advice camp we learn that Major-General Thackwell's advance cavalry would probably fall back about four miles from its recent position,-It appears that a move was ordered on the 18th, for the morning of the 19th, but countermanded late at night. It was supposed to have been intended in the direction of Goojrat, in consequence of information having been received that a strong division of the Sikh Army had marched to take up a position at Dinghee. It seems beyond a doubt that the policy of the Commander-in-Chief is to act on the defensive until the fall of Mooltan, especially as the British force now holds the most fertile portion of the Jetch Doab from Julalpoor, a little to the eastward of Goojrat, on the right, to Phalia on the left .- Delhi Gaz., Dec. 27.

The Commander-in-Chief, with all the forces that were on this side of the river, crossed the Chenab on the 18th instant, without any loss, excepting a few camels. They are now encamped on the right bank. Great quantities of rain fell during the hours of three and six on the morning of the 19th. Christie's corps of Irregular Cavalry accompanied the Commander-in-Chief, and not Holmes's as was originally intended. That corps is also with the Commander-in-Chief. They escorted Austin's battery (now under the commander of Robinson), who are protecting all the villages from being looted by the camp followers. Information had been received in camp, and was credited, that some thousands of Affghans and twelve guns had come down as far as the Jelum, but refused to cross and aid Shere Sing until they received a certain amount of pay in advance. As coin and food are both very scarce in the camp of the enemy, it is expected they will march back again. The Bunneahs have been obliged to close their shops, as they can find no otta to sell, and very many people have only meal in two days. This state of things cannot last long. A letter had been received from Major Lawrence on the 17th. Its contents are not yet known to any one save the Chief. Abbott was all safe, according to the latest accounts from Gen. Thackwell's camp, and Attok still held out. Moolraj's brother had joined Shere Sing on the 17th, and was received with a salute. The field works at Ramnuggur are for the present discontinued. Another letter, from Gen. Thackwell's camp, says that "Narrain Sing is reported to be on his way from Mooltan to join Shere Sing with about 4,000 men." The following is also from camp Heyla. December 19th:—

Heyla, December 19th:—
"Camp, Heyla, Dec. 19, 1848.—Since the battle of the 3rd all have remained quiet. Negotiations, report positively asserts, are going on between Shere Sing and our Government, by which the former is to give up his guns and munitions of war, provided he and all his followers be allowed a free pardon. Such a consummation I fancy improbable, as the enemy are encamped in a very strong position, one flank resting on the river Jelum, the other on a particularly thick and high jungle, which the British army must pass before it can attack the Seiks, and which both General Thackwell and Major Makeson have reported impracticable for any arm of the service. The Sings them elves seem very quiet; they yesterday advanced a body of 10,000 men to a village named Dingory, on the Guzarat road, but the movement appears to have been made only for the convenience of their The Commander-in-Chief crossed the river yesterday, and Thackwell's force was to have marched this morning to Guzarat, and join the head-quarters camp. The march was countermanded. I do not know the reason, unless it was the heavy rain which fell during the night. Brigadier Pope, with three guns and two regiments of cavalry, remain at Ramnuggur. A brigade of infantry with three guns is at Wuzeerabad. Brigadier Eckford, you see, is ordered to Lahore; the 73rd N. I. are no longer in the army of the Punjab."-Mofussilite, Dec. 26.

The following is a late Letter from the Army of the Punjab, dated 21st Dec .: - "The Commander-in-Chief with all the disposable force at Ramnugger has crossed the Chenab to join the advanced force under General Thackwell; but what is to be the order of the day after that junction no one appears to know. hear Shere Singh has been obliged by the late heavy rains to shift his camp from the vicinity of the banks of the Jhelum, and has come more out into the open plain, in the direction of Heilah, about one mile. Last night we heard discharges of some forty pieces of heavy ordnance from the direction of the enemy's What the occasion might be I know not. Chutter Singh may have joined the Shere; Dhost Mahomed may have declared against us (very doubtful), and finally the Shere may have heard of the fall of Attock; which of all these cogent reasons may have led to the expenditure of the Seikh ammunition, I know not; my own private opinion is, that they hope to intimidate us and keep up their own hearts."-Bombay Gent. Gaz., Jan. 3.

The following order was issued by Major-Gen. Thackwell, on his expecting to give up the command of the advanced portion of the army of the Punjab:—

"Army Detachment Orders, Camp Heyla, 18th Dec. 1848.

As the detached portion of the army, which was engaged in the action of Soodoolapore will soon, probably, be united with the head quarters, Major-General Sir J. Thackwell, K. C. B., and K.H., takes the present opportunity to offer his best thanks to Brigadier Campbell and the officers of his personal, divisional, and brigade staff, and the officers of the Engineers and Sappers, for their able assistance during the action on the 3rd of December. The conduct of the Artillery was above all praise, December. and he begs Lieut .- Col. Grant, Major Christie, Captains Huish, Warner, Austin, and Kiulside, and the officers and men under their cemmand, will accept his best thanks, and feel assured that he has not failed to bring to the notice of the Right Honourable the Commander-in-Chief their glorious bearing, and the destructive effect of their fire. To Brigadiers White and Pennycuick, Eckford, and Hoggan, and Major Tait, his best thanks are due, as well as to the officers and men under their command, as well as those under Lieut. Bacon, to the native officers and sepoys also, for their exemplary conduct, during their march from Ramnugger, and for their steadiness and coolness under the enemy's fire at Soodoolapoor, and he feels assured that if circumstances permitted their being brought into close action, that they would have made a glorious example of the enemy."—Mofussilite, Dec. 26.

We are in receipt of the following communications from Mooltan, which give us already a foretaste of what is speedily to follow. It will be seen by our Bahawulpore correspondence that the frequent cavalry reconnoissances on the part of General Whish have closed the gates of Mooltan against the entry of the large supplies that have hitherto found their way into the town, and that the price of grain has already suffered a material increase. We may now daily look for important events from the southern extremity of the Punjab:—

"CAMP MOOLTAN, 19th Dec., 1848. - Our camp now exhibits all the bustle of preparations. All yesterday backeries were moving too and fro from the ghat with heavy munitions of war; they are again to-day on the same errand. Cattle have also been sent for the train. Colonel Dundas will be here on Thursday, and I believe it is in contemplation to move into position on Friday, the siege to commence on the night of Monday. A day or two ago we had a report that the Dewan was engaged in making some small boats; perhaps he has caught the idea of escaping over the ghats into the country beyond the Indus. On Shaik Eman-ood-deen's advance upon Jhung, a man came out to meet him, informing him that Narain Singh had bolted, so quiet possession was taken. The enemy came back to Mooltan in small detachments as quick as possible, and it is believed their leader is snug in the fort of Chunecout. Yesterday the 11th Light Cavalry went out towards Seetulke-Marre, and were afterwards followed by some of Jacob's horse; the latter had a skirmish, and two men wounded, but succeeded in capturing a number of camels. The pioneers are hard at work excavating trenches, &c, that they may be au fait at the real work ere long. The battery and mine are beautifully constructed, and are certainly chef d'œuvres of engineering skill. We are very badly off for dooly bearers; an order has been issued for an equal distribution of the few we possess; on dit that our original full complement of Hindustanee Kahars was discharged, as they refused to make ice, and punjabee ones entertained in their stead; as might be expected, their patriotic zeal has led them to decamp, to the great detriment of our hospital establishment. We are famously off for supplies, the peoof the country well knowing which side their bread is buttered."

"Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 21, 1848.—The guns and park, &c., of our beaux camarades, the Ducks, came into camp yesterday afternoon, and were followed by themselves this morning, all in high glee and health. To-morrow morning we are to move into position, as I told you in my last, but nobody knows whither or where. The scaling ladders have been inspected, and measured of late, so a dour in that quarter is not at all impracticable. Perhaps the evening of Christmas-day will witness a hard fight. Moolraj thinks so, as it is the Eed of the Feringees; a good look-out to be kept accordingly. Many desertions from the Dewan occur daily. Beyond his staunch little garrison, I ex-Many desertions from the pect he will have no adherents that will give us much trouble. Yesterday a large gang of Bunneeas were seized actually smuggling provisions into Mooltan; they certainly ought to be hung as they deserve. A court-martial has awarded forty-five lashes not yet been carried into effect. The weather is piercing cold, night and day."-Delhi Gaz. Dec. 27.

OUR PUNJAB POLICY.

The latest news from the Punjab confirms the opinion which has been gradually gaining ground with the progress of events, that we have the whole of the Punjab to reconquer. On the east and west, the north and the south, in our rear as well as in our front, enemies are springing into life; all the Khalsa troops who survived our victories appear to have taken the field against us. The guns which were intrusted to the Sikh chiefs who commanded the reformed army, and those which were left in Mooltan and Peshawur, as well as those which Chutter Singh was allowed to take from Lahore to fortify the mouth of the Khyber Pass, are now turned against us, as well as the enemy would appear to possess as great a number of pieces as we transported in triumph, from station to station, through India. We have before us one of the most arduous struggles in which we have ever been engaged, and we stand in need of a genius of the first order, equal to the crisis, and capable of forming those great military combinations by which the largest amount of success may be insured with the smallest sacrifice of life. Any serious reverse may array all the resources of Golab Singh against us, bring down on us a tide of invasion from every hamlet in the Punjab, and constrain us again to fight the battles of our empire on our bank of the Sutlej. Unfortunately, just at the time when all our disposable force is required in the north of the Punjab, we have fifteen thousand men employed in the south in the siege of Mooltan. However doubtful may have been the military propriety of sending an army to reduce Mooltan when Moolraj originally set up his standard against us, we believe few of the military authorities, -we mean, of those whose genius and experience entitle than to that distinction, as well as those who happen to be military authorities from their professional position,—who will not be ready to admit that, considering the subsequent course of events, it would have been more advisable to close that wound at once, at all hazards, than to have allowed it to fester and spread its venom through the whole frame. When the proposal to send a sufficient force to Mooltan was urged on the public authorities, it was asserted that British troops should not be exposed to the heat of summer and the rains of the monsoon; but that two large armies should be formed in the winter, the one to march against Mooltan, and the other to watch the disaffected in the Punjab. It is precisely that programme of the campaign which is now exhibited. By the 15th December we shall have 15,000 men before Mooltan, and double that number in the north; and the prognostications of those who advised prompt and decisive measures towards Mooltan have been fully realized. They asserted that if Moolraj was allowed to hold the town for six months, the whole of the Punjab would be up in arms; that procrastination would be attributed to pusillanimity, that our doubtful friends would be converted into open enemies, and that the local insurrection would grow into a national revolt. This prophecy has been The dragon's teeth we have sown by our delays and apparent timidity have sprung up in every direction. One body of Khalsa troops after another has broken out into open revolt; chief after chief, and district after district has been lost to our interests, and we have now a nation in arms against us, animated by those magnificent hopes which our indecision has inspired.

Whatever may have been the difficulties and the risk of proceeding against Mooltan in May, they are light in comparison with those which we have now to encounter. To avoid a lesser evil, we have plunged into a greater. There is every reason to believe that a vigorous effort would have been successful in reducing Mooltan in less than three months. Nothing has yet transpired to weaken the opinion of nearly all, if not all, the political officers acquainted with the politics of the Punjab, including that of Sir George Clerk, that of all the Punjab chiefs, Moolraj was the least disaffected towards us. We have the most satisfactory evidence, though not that of Major Edwardes, that at the time when our political officers were assassinated, he had not more than 4,500 men and a few guns with him. An instantaneous attack would probably have placed the fortress at once in our possession, while the exhibition of the same promptitude which had been displayed in the two preceding years would have overawed those who were ready to take advantage of our irresolution and prevented the revolt of other Sikh chiefs. Promptitude and energy exercise an almost miraculous influence on all human affairs, but in no country is the importance of these virtues so singularly exhibited as in India, where the pusillanimity and the presumption of the people are always in the extreme. It has been affirmed that a general conspiracy had been formed against us by all the Sirdars, of which the revolt of Moolraj was only the first move; that the most Machiavellian plan had been constructed; that it was arranged that as soon as our military strength at the capital had been weakened by the dispatch of troops to Mooltan, the other chiefs were to rise against us, through the length and breadth of the land, and hence, that to have proceeded against Moolraj before the winter, would have been to play into the enemy's hand, and fall into the trap which had been laid for us. But until we have greater evidence of this discovery of the plans of the disaffected, at the time of Moolraj's defection, and of its distinct influence upon our counsels and operations than is yet before the public, we cannot be expected to give credit to As soon as Parliament is again assembled, explanations of these extraordinary proceedings in the Punjab will be demanded of the President of the Board of Control, and he will of course be prepared to submit all the documents connected with it to the house. If the Blue Book should disclose that the Com-mander-in-Chief did positively assign this as the pre-eminent reason for withholding his sanction from the proposal of Sir Frederick Currie to march instantly against Mooltan, as Colonel Lawrence marched against Cashmere, we shall of course feel no farther hesitation in giving implicit credit to That Blue Book will give us the dispatch which, from the apparent soundness of its military conceptions, the clearness of its professional argumentation, as well as the elegance of its style, seems to have created the conviction that there was no lack of judgment in the Commander-in-Chief's cabinet. The paternity of that, and of succeeding dispatches is as great a secret down here as the letters of Junius, as none of the men around his Excellency were at that time supposed to be equal to such a composition. Be that as it may; even supposing that the campaign was postponed to the winter simply to baffle the plans of the conspirators, there is every reason to believe that as the Lahore chiefs had no organized force, no troops collected, and no resources prepared to contest the sovereignty of the Punjab with us, the decision of character exhibited by an immediate march to Mooltan, and by the determination to bring Moolraj, like Sheikh Emamoodeen, a prisoner to Lahore, would have effectually damped their ardour, and the troops at our command would have been sufficient to defeat any immature attempts at insurrection, and to crush the conspiracy in its cradle. Even if they had thus broken out into revolt, we should have been in a better position to meet them than we are at present, when they can bring twenty or thirty thousand well-organized troops into the field, and are in possession of all the resources of the country from the Chenab to the Khyber Pass.—Friend of India, Dec. 14.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT. - DEC. 13, 1848.

In the Matter of the Rance of Lahore. - Mr. Peterson moved for a habæus corpus directed to Major McGregor at Benares, in whose custody this lady now is under the orders of the Governor-General; the affidavit stating that she had been originally imprisoned at Shikarpore by the Lahore government, and that in February last she was removed to Benares and placed in Major McGregor's custody. That the deponent, Mr. Newmarch, her attorney, in September last, obtained permission from the Governor-General to see her, in the presence of a Govern-ment officer. That he visited her accordingly, and Major McGregor told him that the Ranee was detained under instructions from the Governor-General which he refused to show, that he was ignorant what the charges were, and did not believe there were any specific charges; but that he believed it was done at the request of Sir Frederick Currie, upon suspicion of her being concerned in intrigues against the Lahore Government, as to which an investigation was then going on. That the Ranee had stated to the deponent that no charges had yet been made in her presence, nor had she been present at any examination. The affidavit further stated the Ranee to be a native and subject of the Lahore state, and that by the first article of a treaty bearing date March 9, 1846, being still in force, it was declared that there should be a perpetual peace between the Maharajah of Lahore (her son) and the British Government; and by the 15th article thereof, the subjects of either state visiting the territory of the other were to be placed on the footing of the most favoured nations. That she was still in confinement at Benares, and subject to be sued for debts there, and was an alien ami within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the war now going on was against the wishes of the Lahore Government, between whom and the British Government there was no war pending.

Sir L. Peel, C.J.-This application was made before me in chambers, and the subject was then fully considered by my learned colleagues and myself. The argument of the learned counsel has not altered the opinion which we formed, when we thought the matter concluded, and we think it desirable to deliver our opinion at once. Great stress appears to be laid on the circumstance that the two states are on terms of amity. Undoubtedly the two states are so, and allies; but there is no such union, no such indivisibility in the subjects of a state as a body, as to render the question-whether an individual subject of a state is an alien, friend, or enemy-necessarily dependent in every case on the state of the relations between the heads of the countries. The British Indian Government, as any other Government, may enter into treaties of alliance, and bind itself to support its ally against foreign attack or the rebellion of its own subjects. In the latter case, if a rebellion broke out, a casus fæderis, would arise which would make assistance obligatory; but the rebels against whom actual hostilities would be carried on would not be rebels to, but simply enemies of the ally,-for to the ally they would owe no allegiance. recognizes the separation of subjects of a foreign state, into alien friends and alien enemies, in other cases than that of the simple residence of a part of them peaceably in our own territories during war. The king may declare war against a state, excepting a portion of the subjects of that state. See Wells v. Williams, 1 Lord Raym. 282. See also Foster's Crown Law, 1 Disc., High Treason, s. 4, p. 118. 1 Disc. c. 2, s. 12, p. 219, on the subject of an alien amy adhering to our enemies; or a British subject assailing our allies. It was never customary to commence such limited hostilities by formal declaration of war, and there may be both in law and in fact actual hostilities without any declaration of war at all. Since then a portion of the Seikhs may be our friends, and another portion our enemies, in law as well as in fact, it is merely necessary to consider to which class this lady should be referred. It was argued that the court cannot take judicial notice that we are at war. If this was so, still it is sufficient to observe that these affidavits sufficiently disclose actual hostilities. It appears further that the imprisonment of this lady commenced in her own state, on grounds of suspicion of adherence to the enemies of that state; the laws of that state-if any laws beyond the will of the ruler have any respect paid to them-are not known to us; but in time of actual or approaching hostilities, the detention of a suspected person, when the safety of the state is deemed to be concerned, can scarcely be presumed to be an infringement of their laws. Into the acts of the Lahore state this court has no jurisdiction whatever to inquire; whether the suspicions entertained were reasonable or not, it lies beyond our province to determine. Our inquiry must be limited to her actual status. Now it appears that she came not into this state as a visiter, either for pleasure or for business, or seeking the protection of its laws: she was brought by our Government, with the concurrence of her own, a prisoner here, after the commencement of hostilities, and is here detained without any intervening change of circumstances. How can it with any reason be said of a person so entering these territories, that she comes hither as an alien friend? She owes, under the circumstances of such a forced detention, not even a temporary allegiance to this state. It is not necessary that the subject even of a foreign state at war with us should visit us under a safe conduct, or a license, to be regarded as an alien friend; but nothing can be predicated of this lady's status at present with truth, but that she is a state prisoner detained by the authority of the Governor-General, and though not taken in arms, her status under the circumstances of her detention appears to us not different from that of a prisoner of war. Even in the character of a mere state prisoner, enough is not shewn to lead to an inference that her imprisonment is illegal. She is not resident where the English law is the general law as regards personal liberty. The English law as to personal liberty does pro vail in Calcutta as to all its inhabitants. Beyond the local limits of Calcutta the English law on this subject is the personal law of a class-viz. British subjects, which they carry with them. The common law of England, which gives the right to this writ, has been introduced in Calcutta with the general body of the English law. Nothing but an act of the legislature could here in Calcutta suspend its operation; but the power of the Governor-General to hold, in the Mofussil, prisoners of state in confinement, and detain them there without a charge, suspicion alone, appears from the Regulation III. of 1818. The mere fact then of a detention by the order of the Governor-General of such a person in the Mofussil as a state prisoner, without charges made, or evidence of guilt communicated, does not, as it would here, establish or raise a presumption of a case of imprisonment contrary to law; and the fact that the detention is by a British subject does not advance the right to this remedy, since the subjection of the keeper to the general jurisdiction of this court does not give any additional claim to freedom to the detained person, which he would want in the custody of one not so subject; the question depending, so far as regards the detained, on his status, or on the illegality of the imprisonment, and not on the accident of the status of the keeper. The conduct of the Governor-General in so dealing with state prisoners is exempt from the jurisdiction of this court, as well as of the courts of the Honourable the East-India Company. For an oppressive use of this power, which is not to be supposed probable, the remedy would be by application to a higher, though distant authority. It appears that this lady, who is not a subject, who owes not even a temporary allegiance, who is brought into this country a prisoner of state during actual hostilities, and so remains, hostilities still raging, can claim no right to this high prerogative writ, grantable as of right to a subject for the vindication of that liberty which the English law gives to all resident where it prevails.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALLOWANCES TO NATIVE TROOPS.—An order is out for granting Scinde allowances to the native troops of the army of the Punjab from the date of their crossing the Sutlej. This is an addition of Rs. 3-8 per mensem to their monthly pay.

Indian Churka. - The gold medal of the Agricultural Society, and Major Jenkins's prize of Rs. 500, have been awarded to Mr. J. H. Mather for the best improvement on the Indian Churka.

MESSRS. W. T. TAYLOR AND A. RAIKES, of the civil service, have been admitted to furloughs of the present season.

An Aeronaut has arrived in Calcutta, and a balloon ascent will take place as soon as a sufficient number of subscribers can be found to pay the expenses of the trip.

A BRUTAL MURDER was committed in Bow Bazar on the 17th Dec. An American sailor struck another seaman (an Englishman) with a "slung shot" and killed him on the spot, simply because he was disappointed in getting a cup of coffee.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL, it seems, will henceforth make Loodianah his head-quarters.

MAJOR MACKESON, a political officer of distinction, has been sent from the frontier to join the Commander-in-Chief.

THE MAIL (express from Bombay), with letters from London to Nov. 7, arrived in Calcutta on the 18th Dec.

SIR FREDERICK CURRIE (it is said) has been re-appointed to the Supreme Council; Sir John Littler will probably succeed

Sir Herbert Maddock, as deputy-governor of Bengal.

Bank of Bengal.—Messrs. J. Cowie and D. Jardine have been elected directors of the Bank of Bengal, in place of Messrs. H. Cowie and C. B. Skinner.

PREMIUM FOR HONESTY.—The treasurer of the Sudder Court is dead, and a successor is to be appointed on the same salary (Rs. 30), and giving the same security (Rs. 30,000).

CIVIL SERVICE. - A great many changes in the civil service are likely to take place owing to the removal of Mr. Ricketts to the Sudder Board, on the promotion of Mr. Lowis.

WAR STEAMER. - Mr. Moule, the ship-builder, at Maulmain, has obtained a contract for building a war steamer for her Majesty's service.

THE 15TH N.I.-A letter from camp, Ramnugger, dated Dec. 5, states that while the 15th N.I. were drawn up behind the batteries, waiting for orders, a round shot came in amongst them, and struck Lieut.-col. Sibbald, carrying away the hilt of his sword, and ran down his thigh, bruising it a good deal.

HOOSHEAPORE. - News has come in that the Sikhs have attacked Hoosheapore and robbed the treasury; fortunately there was only a small sum in hand (Rs. 20,000); fears were entertained for the cantonments of Jullundur.

LAHORE, December 13.—The following force is to leave Lahore this evening against a small fort midway between this and Ferozepore, about twenty miles from Lahore, but off the main road, in which is a "pugnacious old lady," who has been assembling, arming, and then sending to join Shere Sing, bodies of Sikhs, about 500 strong:

Detail of Force.

Two 18-pounder guns under Lieutenant Fagan. Two Horse Artillery guns under Lieutenant Williams.

Two companies H. M.'s 53rd Foot. One ditto 73rd N.I.

One ditto 50th N.J.

Quin's 13th Irregular and Lumsden's Guide Corps, the whole under the command of Major Mansfield, of the 53rd Queen's.

ACCIDENT TO COLONEL WESTON.—We regret much to learn that Colonel Weston, commanding at Allyghur, has met with a serious accident; while out riding he fell from his horse and broke his leg a little above the ancle.

THREE RECRUITING DEPOTS are to be formed, at Meerut, Cawnpore, and Benares, for the purpose of entertaining recruits for those corps whose position in the field renders it impracticable to increase their ranks to the regulated strength.

THE 34TH N.I. reached Lodecanah on the 1st Dec., less three companies left at Kana-he-serai, by order of Colonel Benson, to assist the 9th N.I. in protecting the camp of the Governor-General, which had suffered severely from thieves, especially in the neighbourhood of Thanesur.

THE RIGHT WING OF THE 61st N. I. and head-quarters of the corps, under command of Major McDonald, left Benares on the afternoon of Nov. 28, in progress to Allahabad, with all possible expedition by forced marches, leaving the sick and weakly men and heavy baggage to come up with the left wing, commanded by Capt. Talbot, who was to make the regular marches. The right wing reached Allahabad Dec. 1, or in four days from Benares.

THE LATE LIEUT.-COL. HAVELOCK entered the army in July, 1810, and served in the Peninsula from that time to the end of that war in 1814, and was present at the battles of Busaco, Sabugal, Salamanca, and Vittoria, at the passage of the Bidassoa, the battle of the Nivelle, of Orthes and Busaco, and he was finally wounded on the field of Waterloo. In these numerous engagements, the last of which was fought before he was twenty-four years of age, he established a character throughout the service for the most chivalrous gallantry. It was not reserved to him to fall in the arms of victory, but in the last moment of his honourable career he has left an example of heroic devotion to his country, which will, we hope, serve to animate other bosoms in the arduous struggle on which we are now apparently entering. - Friend of India, Dec. 14.

THE DEPOT OF H. M.'s 9TH LANCERS Were to march from Meerut en route to Unballah, under command of Cornet Shaw.

THE 19TH N.I. reached Allyghur in progress to Meerut and the frontier on the 1st Dec., and will escort a considerable amount of treasure from that station towards Ferozepore.

THE NUSSEREE BATTALION .- A letter from Simla intimates that a wing of the Nusseree battalion at Jutogh had been ordered down, some disturbance having occurred at the foot of the hills, the nature of which has, however, not been specified.

THE 62ND N. I. expect to reach Benares about the first week in January; they had only reached Rajmahal on the 28th of November.

A WING OF THE 34TH N.I. relieved the wing of the 4th N. I. at Nakodah on the 8th Dec. It began to rain soon after the detachment left Loodeeanah, and the men proposing to march on, instead of halting on the road, the two stages of twenty-eight miles were got over in nine hours and a half. The wing (left) miles were got over in nine hours and a half. The wing (lett) of the 4th N.I., under command of Capt. Wilcox, marched on the 9th for Jullundhur, the right wing having proceeded thither a few days before.

UNION BANK. - We are informed that the Union Bank scheme of liquidation was signed yesterday on behalf of Messrs. Glyn, Halifax, Mills, and Co. The amount represented by the creditors who have signed up to the present date exceeds forty-five We learn that the official statement of the lacks of rupces. committee will appear in the course of the present week.-Hurkaru, Dec. 22.

LIEUT. HUNTER, OF THE 18TH N. I., was attacked while daking on his way to Lodiana, but he has only got a slight cut; the bearers were all wounded, more or less.

THE CALCUTTA PLOT. -It is with no surprise that we learn from the Hindu Intelligencer that the result of the inquiry into the circumstances of this plot, which excited such a panic in timid breasts, is the incarceration of the luckless Pretender, Pertaub Chund, in the insane hospital.

ESTATE OF MESSES. TULLOH AND Co.-The second dividend on this estate at Rs. 2. 6 as. per cent. is in course of payment at the office of the assignees.

THE NEW SHIP Trafalgar arrived at Madras on the 13th inst. Her long voyage has been occasioned by a succession of calms and light winds. She fell in with the Prince of Wales at sea, and a breeze springing up, "ran her," according to our correspondent's statement, "out of sight" in thirty-six hours. The Trafalgar may be expected here early next month.—Hurkaru, Dec. 25.

ATTOK.—It affords us much satisfaction to have it in our power to announce that no attempt had been made to molest Capt. Abbott up to the 1st inst. He had received intelligence of the move of more troops (also mentioned by our native Lahore correspondent) towards the Jelum. Attok was safe at the same date, and making, to judge by all we have heard, a most gallant defence. The loss of Chuttur Singh on one day alone, the 24th of November, is said to have been forty-six killed and wounded. -Delhi Gazette, Dec. 16.

Ouds. - The following is an extract of a letter from Lucknow, dated Dec. 15th.—" The races commenced yesterday, and have brought some life into our otherwise dull station. The newlyestablished dak-carriage, which commenced running this month between this and Cawnpore, has brought several parties interested in the races to Lucknow. Three of the king's regiments were disbanded on the 13th instant; they were the Jafferees, the Daoodees, and the Hyzan Hydraes; their offence seems to have been committed a year ago; Rugbur Dyal, one of the Chuckladars (collectors of revenue) ran away into the Company's territories, with a debt of many lakhs owing to the king. The abovementioned three regiments were ordered to apprehend him, but instead of catching the real offender, they arrested some relation of Rugbur Dyal's, whom they obliged to pay the arrears due, and then let him off, notwithstanding strict injunctions from the court to bring bim to Lucknow. it is that they are only punished now I cannot say. Wujeed Ali is now amusing himself reviewing his two cavalry (king's own) regiments, and by way of variety, firing cannons and volleys of musketry. The weather is pleasant, not cold."

Annexation of the Punjab. - As to the dread which is expressed that the extension of our frontier to the Indus will render the empire itself more insecure, it will disappear as soon as it is analyzed. Though it may be true that we shall have a frontier of 300 miles more to defend, yet the people who will thus be brought in contact with us are far less turbulent, and less likely to make inroads, and less disposed to disturb the peace and tranquillity of our districts, than the restless and perthan the Sutlege and Beas, with a large body of warlike Sikhs beyond them, ever ready for war. The new boundary we ocbeyond them, ever ready for war. The new boundary we occupy will, in fact, be that which Runjeet Singh created, and we can assuredly keep it as securely as he was able to do. As it respects the internal state of the Punjab when it becomes an integral part of our own diminions, we shall find the same result which has been exhibited in every other part of India. consult our Indian experience, we have the strongest argument for at once annexing it. Those provinces and districts which we have thus incorporated with our territories have invariably given us the smallest portion of anxiety and trouble; and every fresh step we have taken in the way of annexation has confirmed this experience. Since we have annexed Scinde to the empire, not the slightest effort has been made to throw off our yoke; our Government has not been alarmed by a single revolt. acquiescence to our rule has been as complete and as remarkable Wherever in India we have annexed a proas it is in Bengal. vince to the crown of Great Britain, and deprived the chiefs of their artillery, disbanded the native soldiery, and encouraged the plough and the loom, and taxed lightly and governed mildly, we have found that there has been nothing to fear from the circumstance that our Government was a foreign one. - Friend of India, Nov. 23.

It is positively puerile to discuss the honesty or dishonesty of the act of annexation. If we have made treaties with the Sikhs, they have been made on the understanding that they would govern their country peaceably and leave us unmolested. They have had a fair trial and now deserve no quarter. Messenger, Nov. 18.

THE NATIVE PRESS IN THE NORTH-WEST PROVINCES. - There are at present seventeen lithographic presses established in these provinces, from which newspapers and periodicals in the native languages are issued, independent of such as are conducted by Christian missionaries at Mirzapore and elsewhere. From all of these, except from the Mutba Meerzaee at Delhi, and the Mutba Hoosseinee at Agra, newspapers are issued, and of these papers three are in the Persian language, viz. the palace newspaper of Delhi, or the Sooraj-ool Ukhbar, the Sadik-ool Ukhbar of Delhi, and Zoobdut-ool Ukhbar of Agra; and three in the Nagree character,—the Benares, Simla, and Soodhakur Uhhbars; the rest are published in Oordoo. The Mutba Meerzaee and Hoosseinee presses are devoted altogether to the publication of religious and other works. - Friend of India.

MR. MILLETT has just resigned his seat in the Council, and returns to his native land, after an actual service of twenty-nine years in India. His long official experience, the calmness and solidity of his judgment, and his habits of laborious research, have rendered his aid invaluable in the improvement of our administrative institutions. Whatever public question was presented for his opinion was examined with a degree of care and industry of which we have few examples in our public men. The charge of slowness, which has sometimes been imputed to him, may be fully explained by his anxiety to examine every subject in all its bearings, to trace its history from the beginning, and to weigh with impartiality all the arguments which could possibly be adduced. In 1833, he was summoned to Calcutta on the special duty of revising the Civil Regulations; and the papers which he drew up on the occasion, though not embodied in our Code, will remain a monument of his assiduity and his legal knowledge. In February, 1835, he was appointed Secretary to the Law Commission, and continued to take a most prominent share in the labours of that body,—of which he was subsequently made a member,—till he was raised to Council in the beginning of 1844. It was chiefly in the department of legislation that the benefit of his exertions has been more particularly felt, and whenever the history of our laws may be laid open, the public will be enabled fully to appreciate the advantages which have been derived from his suggestions and emenda tions.-Frend of India, Dec. 7.

PERTAB CHUND .- A correspondent of the Friend of India has sent the following communication with reference to Pertab Chund, the soi-disant Rajah of Burdwan, and his connection with the Sikhs :- " The pretender to the raj of Burdwan, Pertab Chund, when his pretension to the succession was investigated by a commission, some years back, gave in evidence that in his peregrinations he had visited Lahore, and that the 'Lal Kubuter,' mentioned in Runjeet Singh's communications to the old Rajah of Burdwan, meant himself-Pertab Chund. This may show his connection with the Sikhs. I recollect, that between the years '31 and '33, a body of Sikhs had located themselves, as merchants, at some distance from Cutwa, and had constant communication with Burdwan, by means of camels; one going, and one returning daily. But the Sikhs, having taken lands at a higher rent per bigha, and being engaged in constructing immense thick mud walls to surround their homestead, drew the attention of the Burdwan magistrate, and they were no more heard of."

HEIGHT OF THE HIMALAYAS.—At a meeting of the Asiatic Society on the 6th November, a paper by Col. Waugh, surveyor-general, was read, giving the result of that officer's operations to determine the height of several Himalayan peaks in the neighbourhood of Darjeeling. Col. Waugh appears to have satisfactorily ascertained that the western peak of Cutchinchinga was 28,176 feet high, and the eastern 27,825—thus claiming for that mountain the greatest altitude on the earth yet known, EXTRAORDINARY REQUEST. - One Zalimgir, resident of the village of Busaon, in thana Secrole, presented a petition through his brother to the deputy magistrate, petitioning that, as it had pleased fate to afflict him with leprosy, the magistrate would sanction his burning himself! The deputy magistrate explained to the petitioner that, however such a practice was sanctioned by the Hindoo Shastras, the British Government could not con-nive at a procedure so repugnant to the ordinary feelings of humanity. He enjoined on the unfortunate petitioner resignation to the will of Providence; and he explained to the parties concerned, that the law would punish all persons concerned in aiding and abetting the burning of a leper in the same way as it would punish for being concerned in a homicide.—Benares Recorder, Dec. 2.

THE INDIAN CHURKA .- An elaborate Report by the Committee of the Agricultural Society on the various kinds of churkas (cotton-cleaning machines), their respective merits as to speed, cost and quality of the article produced, has been published in the Calcutta papers, and it is upon the whole highly favourable to the machine invented and constructed by Mr. Mather. The quantity submitted to the action of the machines was a quarter of a pound of kapass, sent from Agra. churka was fed by a native, the other machines by Europeans, and must therefore have appeared to a disadvange. result shewed that the native machine occupied 8m. 50sec. in cleaning that quantity, Potter's 7m. 15sec., Burn's 6m. 0sec., and Mather's 3m. 30sec.; so that Mather's machine effected the cleansing in one-third of the time of the native churka. But each of the three machines was, on this occasion, worked by three men, while the native churka was worked by one; and it was, therefore, supposed that to make the cost of labour equal, they must perform the work in one-third of the time. This was effected only by Mather's machine. The comparative merits as to production stand thus: native, 1; Potter's, 1'012; Burn's, 1'462; Mather's, 3'010. This is for their comparative, not positive merits; of the latter, the Committee professed themselves unable to form any opinion from the smallness of the experiments submitted. The Committee also intimate their opinion that no "satisfactory result as to the actual working of Mather's machine can be arrived at until tried upon the large scale intended by Government."

THE RANGE OF LAHORE.—Every one is of course aware that the Ranee Chunda, who was suspected of being at the bottom of the intrigues in the Punjab, which have terminated in a general revolt, was conveyed as a state prisoner to Benares, on the breaking out of hostilities, and placed under the surveillance of Major McGregor. She is allowed as much liberty as may be consistent with her safe custody. She has the range of a large and ample mansion, with as many servants as she considers necessary for her own comfort, and is deprived of no luxury but her liberty. From the Governor-General's agent she receives the utmost consideration and kindness, but she is, of course, disgusted with her cage, and would gladly exchange her residence at Benares for the palace of Lahore. She had learned that there was a court in this country, superior to the Government itself, where redress might be obtained for any Government itself, where recires inight of obtained for any injuries it was said to have inflicted, and she became, as might well have been expected, most anxious to obtain liberation through its interference. It is not to be supposed that she is not as well informed of the progress of events in the Punjab as Dost Mahomed was of the proceedings at Cabul, and she longs, doubtless, to mix again in its politics. Some time ago Mr. Newmarch, the solicitor, visited Benares, we believe at her request, and was appointed her legal agent in Calcutta. Last week he moved for the interference of the Su. preme Court on her behalf, by the issue of a prerogative writ, but the court has, very wisely, come to the resolution that in the circumstances in which the Ranee is placed—a state prisoner, in the hands of the executive government—the crown courts are barred from any interference. We have placed among our extracts the very luminous judgment of Sir Lawrence Peel, the perusal of which will convey no little satisfaction to those who desire to maintain the harmony of our institutions. Any attempt of the Supreme Court to interfere in such a case as the present, and to take the Ranee out of the hands of the Government, which is responsible for the peace of India, and let her loose in the Punjab, who would have left the Government without any alternative but that of counteracting it in the same manner in which Mr. Hastings was obliged to defeat the encroachments of the court in the Cossijurah case. according to the law of nations, the Ranee be justly or unjustly detained, is altogether another question. Sir Lawrence Peel very justly observed that if there had been any injustice in the case, redress must be sought in another and more distant tribunal. -Friend of India.

THE INDIAN CHURKA.—We are happy to learn that the Agri-Horticultural Society of India on Friday last awarded the gold medal and the premium for the best improvement of the Indian Churka to Mr. Mather's machine. We have on a very recent occasion given the fullest particulars regarding the characteristic excellence of this instrument, and it will not, therefore be necessary to say anything farther on this branch of the subject, till we receive reports of the result of the experiments made with it at the Madras and the Bombay Presidencies. The warm interest which the Governor-General has taken, though encumbered with the anxieties of the present campaign, in this effort to improve the preparation of the indigenous cotton of the country, so as to render it acceptable in the manfactories of England, deserves especial notice, from the promise it holds out to us of farther improvements when the war has been brought to a close. We learn from the Englishman that Mr. Mather has been placed in charge of the Government iron bridge foundry at Alipore, with instructions to make up a large number of the new machines for the sister presidencies. The work will be conducted under the general supervision of the department of the consulting engineer of Government, Mr. Simms, and Mr. Mather will thus possess advantages for those experimental alterations which may be expected to be made in the successive machines. The bridge foundry has latterly been employed chiefly in keeping in repair the bridges now in existence, but it has apparently been maintained at a cost disproportionate to its result. The military board is the most overworked public establishment at this presidency, and its staff, though large, is by no means adequate to the variety of duties and responsibilities heaped upon it. The complaints which are made from time to time of its dilatoriness, recoil upon those who have over tasked its strength; and it is therefore a wise measure of the Government thus to relieve it of one of its burdens, and to place some of those labours which belong to the department of eivil engineering under the direction of the consulting engineer of Government. We have learnt that at the Madras Presidency many of those civil buildings which are here thrown upon the shoulders of the military board, are under the superintendence of the Board of Revenue, with an engineer officer as their secretary. The arrangement appears to be judicious, and we should feel not a little obliged to any of our Madras contemporaries for some distinct information on the subject.—Friend of India.

GWALIOR .- " A person named Ragoba Ram Chunder, formerly karkoon of the Rajah of Jhansee, recommended by Luchmunpunt Nava to Col. Sleeman, has been introduced into the durbar as an assistant to Mama Jadoon, regent of the state. As the Mama personally knows very little of public business. Luchmunpunt Nana, once a Moosaheb of Daba Chasgeewallah. the real cause of the late war between the British and the Gwalior state, has thought this a good opportunity to cause mischief in the state. Ragoba and Luchmunpunt have accordingly put their heads together, and the first thing they have done is to circulate privately intimations that the Colonel Saheb was anxious that accusation should be sent in against the ministers; though they well know that Colonel Sleeman is a just and good man. Accusations were accordingly brought against Bhow Phutnuwees and Moonshee Bulwunt Rao. The complaints have not yet been decided according to law, but the conspirators have succeeded in obtaining the discharge of the Bhow, and having him placed under surveillance. Thus persecuted, the Bhow agreed to pay a certain sum amounting to Rs. 200,000, notwithstanding which payment he is to be disgraced. Moonshee Bulwunt Rao has also been suspended and is under watch. He has further been induced to confess himself wrong, but unless he pays very handsomely, he will also be disgraced. Baba Apta, a learned and able man, has fallen a victim of similar intrigues; people think all these things very extraordinary. Ragoba and Luchmunpunt are giving much trouble to the Saookars by compelling the production of their account books in the adawlut. The people all know that these things cannot be sanctioned by Colonel Sleeman. Certainly mischief must arise from these doings."-Delhi Gazette, Dec. 13.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. EDWARD FORBES, 19TH BENGAL N.I.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Lahore, Nov. 13, 1848.—At a general court-martial assembled at Saugor, on Thursday, Oct. 26, 1848, Lieut. E. Forbes, 19th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For highly unbecoming conduct, in the following instances: lst. In having, at Tigrah, on or about June 16, 1848, himself beaten with a stick Loll Khan, Burkundauze, of the thannah of Simureah, and also caused him to be tied up to a tree, and to be beaten severely by one of his servants.

2nd. In having, on the same day, obtained supplies of porters, grass, wood, earthen pots and milk, from the Cutwal of Tigrah, and in having marched from the village without paying the porters, or for the said supplies.

3rd. In having, at Saugor, on July 20, 1849, appeared in a disgraceful state of intoxication before an European court of inquiry, assembled to investigate the matters set forth in the preceding instances.

Finding. - On the first instance, guilty.

On the second instance, the court find that supplies were furnished to Lieut. Forbes and not paid for; but in consequence of no demand for payment having been made to him, the court attach no criminality to the act, and acquit him thereof.

attach no criminality to the act, and acquit him thereof.

On the third instance, guilty. The court are further of opinion that conduct of which they have found the prisoner guilty is highly unbecoming, as set forth in the charge.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.
(Signed) Gough, General, C.-in-C.
Head-quarters, Camp, Lullecanee, Nov. 11, 1848.

Remarks by the Right Honourable the Commander in-Chief.— The Commander-in-Chief cannot concur in the court's finding on the second instance of the charge. The court appear to have overlooked the circumstance stated in evidence, that the ill-treatment of the Burkundaugze, of which Lieut. Forbes is properly convicted, deterred other persons from demanding payment from him, and his lordship has further to remark, that it is the duty of an officer to proffer payment, and to see that supplies furnished to him are duly paid for, and not to march away without doing so, merely because payment is not demanded of him.

The sentence of the court will take effect from the date on which this order may be published to the 19th reg. N.I.

lieut. John coverdale hall, 56th beng. n.i Head-Quarters, Camp, Ramnuggur, Dec. 11, 1848.—At a general court-martial, re-assembled in camp, Ramnuggur, on Wednesday, November 28, 1848, Lieut. J. C. Hall, 56th N.I., was arraigned on the following charges:

1st. For highly unbecoming conduct in having, in camp, near Deedar Sing ka killa, November 13, 1848, been drunk, and conducted himself in an outrageous manner, threatening to take the lives of several officers of the corps with a loaded pistol and a sword, with which he had armed himself.

2nd. For having, then and there, broken the close arrest previously imposed upon him by his commanding officer, by which he was required to confine himself to his own tent, and for having proceeded with a drawn sword in his hand towards his commanding officer, Maj. D. Bamfield, to whom, after being secured, he applied most insulting and disrespectful language.

Finding. — Guilty of both charges. Sentence. — To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) Gough, General C .- in-C.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Ramnuggur, Dec. 9, 1848. The sentence of the court will take effect from the date on which this order may be published to the 56th regt. of N. I.

THE THREE MADRAS JUDGES.

‡ The Calcutta Englishman has published the following extract of a private letter from the Court of Directors, dated 20th January, 1847, regarding the removal of the three Madras judges:—

"In your letter of the 22nd October, 1846, you have furnished
"In your letter of the 22nd October, which you have been induced to come to the resolution of removing from their office the three judges of the Court of Sudder and Fouzdaree Adawlut, Mr. George J. Waters, Mr. Malcolm Lewin, and Mr. Thomas E. Boileau.

" The memorial itself did not relate to any personal grievance, but was in the nature of an appeal from the authority of Government to that of the Court of Directors, on a question of official duty; you, therefore, very properly resolved, that it should be returned to the memorialists. Of the whole tone and tenor of the memorial we highly disapprove, and we regard the com-ments made by Mr. Lewin and Mr. Boileau on your orders of the 19th of May, as unbecoming and unjustifiable. "In the papers laid before Government by Mr. Waters, it was represented that official documents and information had improperly found their way into the newspapers, and this breach of duty was imputed by him to the authors of the memorial. are surprised that, in drawing the attention of the judges and officers of the Sudder Court to the point, you did not refer expressly to the Notification, in which the principle, that public documents are only held in trust for the performance of public duties, is so distinctly explained, and the violation of that principle is so positively prohibited. We observe that Mr. Boileau, as well as the Registrar of the Court and his deputies, disavowed having communicated any official information to the newspapers; a similar disavowal was not made by Mr. Lewin, who has even denied the right of the Government to question him on the subject, and Mr. Waters acknowledged that, on one occasion, he had himself published, under a feigned signature, a letter relating to discussions in the Court.

" It is with deep concern that we express our entire concurrence in the propriety of removing the three judges.

" Mr. Lewin was deserving of severe censure for the memorial, and the minute relative thereto. Instead of atoning for that impropriety, he has greatly aggravated it, by the whole tenour of his subsequent correspondence. He has reproached the Government with being controlled by party influence, and has disputed and insulted their authority. He has assailed individuals whose conduct was not under his cognizance, in the face of positive assurances furnished to him. He has persisted in imputing wrong motives and views to the Government, and giving way to his excited feelings, he has thrown off all regard to subordination, and has permitted himself to use language highly intemperate and offensive. He has not only failed to take advantage of the opportunity afforded him to disavow, if he could do so with a due regard to truth, having given publicity in the newspapers to official information and documents relating to subjects under discussion betwixt himself and his colleagues, and betwixt the Government and the Sudder Court, but he seems even to lay claim to a right to commit this breach of the express orders quoted above, as well as of the most obvious principles of public duty."

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

Hydrabad.—I can give you no account of the present administration, for though disorders pervade every part of the country, it has literally done nothing. This supineness is worse than maladministration, for in the last case the mischief proceeds from the act of one person, whilst now the evils seem to spring ont of every possible position. The Nizam saw the Resident by invitation yesterday; the conference was strictly private, and nothing is known of it in regard to particulars. The best opinions are, that he intended to consult General Fraser about his affairs-he could not do better. There is but little chance, however, of his adopting any advice, which would involve arduous undertaking, or be opposed to his peculiar prejudices. should be glad to see an administration formed, acceptable to both the Resident and the Nizam, and a cordiality between the last two, not impossible or difficult of attainment (when there is no point of contention between them, as Suraj-ool-Moolk, Mr. Dighton, and others were), which should dispose the Nizam to direct his minister, under his special sanction, to work out practi-cally the advice of the Resident. It is impossible that reform and melioration should not wait upon their united efforts, for it requires no paramount abilities to root out the gross abuses, palpable to the senses of everybody, which exist here. The Nizam is tenacious that nothing shall be reduced of those fed by the bounty of his Government. I say fed by the bounty of his Government, for I do not know the person who renders it adequate service. Tant mieux, his views might be conformed to, and yet retrenchment introduced that would nearly cover the excess of disbursements, said to be twenty lacs. In the single article of resuming the jaghires, now in the possession of Sahookars, and of endowments of Hindoo temples, grants principally from Raja Chundoo Lal, the Government would recover two or three lacs a year. The resumption of mortgaged jaghires, with an allowance in lieu of the mortgagor, superior to that which his mortgagee allowed him, would bring an equal saving to the Government, whilst neither party, who had both transgressed their duty, the one in giving and the other in taking mortgage on the Nizam's lands, and transferring authority over his subjects, would have any right to com-The subversion of frauds, the annihilation of payment to troops and functionaries, which do not exist, would bring a large saving. And those who had fattened upon plunder need not think it too hard if they are made to pay a portion of their wealth in the lump, as a sort of commutation for an income-tax, which the example of England might permit to the Nizam. must be received no otherwise than in the lump, for incometax could not be made to exist for a continuance here, without engendering the worst of abuses. It would be absurd to argue that the experiment might be made to ascertain if the tax-gatherers would abuse their power. In all situations where power is confided, the character of persons is looked to who are empowered to administer to them. The doctrine which would call for ascertainment of facts without previously looking to probable results, would presume to so close an approxima-tion in all things and persons as to make it a matter of indifference as to what party was appointed to preside, and as to what thing he was appointed to preside over. The recal of the jaghires, at least of the Sahookars, was entirely in Soorajool-Moolk's hands-nothing was done in regard to them. give this instance in proof of the inadequacy of his adminis-tration. I have no objection to his theories—like theories ordinarily, they were his by adoption. But whoever confided in his capacity or industry, to carry them into effect? who ever confided in the capacity of his coadjutor, to fill up with the details, the system of which they had given him an outline, which alone they were capable of doing? and that too, perhaps, at second hand. A party of Robillas, four hundred in number, who have committed forcible depredations upon persons, lives, and property of the Nizam's subjects to the north-west, were encountered by a party of Sher Affghan Jung's, and are said by the accounts furnished by him to have sustained a signal defeat. As they were defeated by cavalry, one is at some difficulty to understand why the cavalry did not disperse them and break up the band. They have since plundered the large and opulent village of Armoor, and have carried off seventeen women. The apology offered for Sher Affghan Jung is, that he drove them out of his own into his neighbour's districts, which was all he was concerned to do. There is neither much fealty shown by this apology, nor good policy. The truth may be that Sher Affghan Jung has the same claim to victory which the Chinese fleet have over our ships of war—they fire at them when they have sailed away. But all this time what is the Nizam's Government about? What are his Highness's friends doing? It is quite heartbreaking to look at the apathy of the Government of There is but one measure now apparent to this country.

redeem the anarchy, and that I apprehend the Nizam will force upon our Government. In common with all who have good feelings towards the Nizam's Government, for many obligations derived from it, I have desired to see the Nizam's authority unimpaired (unusurped at least by a minister of neither capacity nor character), but not at the expense of his subjects.—15th. The Nizam informed the Resident at his interview, of his projects for the improvement of his country and affairs. He has been probably well advised; the difficulty always is in arranging a system for execution, that is by projecting the details. The Rohillas have plundered another considerable village on the Julva road, Moonrg.—Madras Spectator, Dec. 25.

BANK OF MADRAS.

A meeting of proprietors was held on Monday, the 11th inst. for the purpose of electing two directors, in the stead of J. Thomson, Esq. and H. Nelson, Esq. whose term of office has expired. There was a larger attendance than ordinary, and the election was a contested one.

The President having stated the object for which the meeting was summoned.

Joseph Goolden, Esq. was proposed as a Director by J. B. Key, Esq. and seconded by W. A. Arbuthnot, Esq. Mr. W. Elliot, in proposing Major Smith, of the engineers,

Mr. W. Elliot, in proposing Major Smith, of the engineers, stated that at the last election of a Director, he had informed the proprietors that Major Smith had on that occasion declined to come forward, owing to the pressure of business at the time, but that he would present himself to the Directors on a future occasion. Mr. Elliot now proposed Major Smith as a Director, he having consented to act. The nomination was seconded by the Rev. G. W. Malon.

Mr. Arbuthnot begged to remark, in reference to what had fallen from Mr. Elliot, that although present at the last election, he had not heard Mr. Elliot say that Major Smith would consent to act at any future time; and he would only add, that had he been aware of it, he would have voted in his favour on this occasion. He believed, with many others, that Major Smith had declined on several previous occasions, and under the impression that he was still unwilling, the directors had looked over the list, with the view to find a proprietor ready to act if called upon.

Under the circumstances stated, he had promised both his votes.

The President begged to qualify in some degree Mr. Arbuthnot's statement, about the interference of the directors in the election, it having only been directed generally to find a proprietor willing to undertake the duties of the office without any intention on the part of the directors of biasing the choice of the proprietors.

W. McTaggart, Esq. proposed W. H. Rose, Esq. and the nomination was seconded by H. Nelson, Esq.

Mr. McDowell proposed P. Carstairs, Esq. seconded by W. Liddell, Esq.

	VOTES
Mr. Goolden	120
Major Smith	120
Mr. Rose	120
Mr. Carstairs

The votes being even, the president gave his casting votes in favour of Mr. Goolden and Major Smith, who were declared duly elected.

After voting thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated. -- Spectator, Dec. 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mysore.-The Madras papers narrate the particulars of a somewhat extraordinary occurrence in Mysore. A Mr. Fitzgerald, formerly a Hussar officer, advertised a book to be called a "Twenty Years' History of Mysore," and published a prospectus containing what were deemed libellous and seditious accusations against the Commissioner. He was immediately arrested by order of Capt. Halsted, 1st-assistant to the Commissioner, and thrown into prison, till he could find bail to the amount of Rs. 500, which he was unable to do, as his friends were unwilling to mix themselves up in the affair. He is to be arraigned on the following charges: - For sedition, in causing to be printed and circulated a prospectus of a History of Mysore which contained seditious matter, tending to excite discontent against the only constituted authorities; for presumptuously addressing the Rajah of Mysore on a subject connected with the Government of his country; and for intriguing with his servants, and illegally obtaining some of his State Papers. Another individual, a Mr. Kenny, has also been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the History, the circulation of the prospectus of which caused extraordinary excitement.

Purifying Sugar. - The details of a very simple process fo purifying sugar were yesterday disclosed by Professor Key, at the Polytechnic Institution, to a number of gentlemen, amongst whom were several members of the leading agency houses in The basis of the discovery is the application of the oxide of lead, in any of its various preparations, as a clarifying agent, in lieu of the method at present in vogue. To a pound of jaggery, half an ounce of the oxide of lead is added, the mass having been previously dissolved in water; an instantaneous change takes place, and on pouring the liquid into a filter, a perfectly clear syrup passes through. The lead is then entirely withdrawn by the employment of a second agent, the name of which is for the present concealed, and rendered available for a repetition of the process.-Athenæum.

COBRA CAPELLA .- An awkward illustration of a well-known Scripture subject was furnished on Sunday evening last, in the American Mission Chapel at Chintadrepettah. The Rev. Mr. Winslow was enlarging to his congregation upon the consequences of Eve's folly in listening to the serpent, when a cobra capella walked into the place, and would no doubt have given some of the inmates speedy reason to know that the mischievous propensities of his kind were not yet extinct, had he not been discovered and slaughtered on the spot.—Ibid., Dec. 12.

Col. Steel.—By the Madras Government Gazette of Dec.
22nd, we learn that Lieut.-Col. Commandant S. W. Steel, C.B., 38th M. N. I., has been appointed to the command of the ceded districts as a brigadier general, in room of Brigadier Anderson proceeding home on leave.

Vizagapatam.—E B. Glass, Esq., civil and session judge of Chicacole, arrived here for the purpose of visiting the Principal Sudder Ameen's court and jail, and has left this again after a very transient stay.

MESSES. FRANK, COLE, AND Co.-A dividend of 1 per cent. on this estate was announced on the 15th Dec.

OOTACAMUND. - A very disgraceful scene is stated to have occurred at the Ootacamund Club, where a party of six officers —one of them belonging to H.M.'s 94th, two to the 2nd E.L.I., the rest to the 26th and 39th N.I.—were expelled for riotous and disgraceful conduct in the club-room. As the whole affair has been published in form, we can only hope that the parties in question may next be brought to court-martial and expelled the army. Such flagrant violations of all social usages are not be endured; and the misconduct of the club-room is only a foretaste or repetition of what might, or what may, have occurred at mess.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

OFF-RECKONINGS.

Dec. 15.—In consequence of the demise of Lieut.-Col. Commandant J. H. Wimbolt, of the infantry, the following addition to the list of officers entitled to off-reckoning is authorized.

Lieut.-Col. Commandant Howard Dowker-to half a share from the Off-Reckoning Fund from the 29th Oct. 1848.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. ROBERT MACKENZIE, 8TH MADRAS N.I. Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Nov. 4, 1848.—Capt. R. Mackenzie, 8th N.I., placed in arrest by order of H. E. the C -in-C., upon the following charges.

First Charge. - For having at Secunderabad, between Sept. 6 and 10, 1848, inclusive, and particularly on the 9th and 10th of the same month, promoted the sending of a challenge which Lieut. W. A. O. Strahan of the 8th N.I. sent, at the said place, on the date last-mentioned, to Ens. C. Hailes of the said regiment, to fight a duel: which challenge he, Capt. R. Mackenzie, on the 9th of the said month, urged on the said Ens. C. Hailes the propriety of accepting when received.

Second Charge. - For unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, between Sept. 6 and 10, 1848, inclusive, been cognizant of, and failed to bring to the knowledge of his commanding officer, Major F. B. Lucas, 8th N.I., the existence of a serious imputation against the character of an officer of the said regiment, which it was his bounden duty to have done as one of the senior officers present with the said regiment, and which course of proceeding the circumstances of the case plainly rendered peculiarly requisite.

Finding.—Guilty.
Sentence.—To be suspended from rank, and pay, and allowances for the period of three calendar months.

Confirmed.

Lieut.-General, C .- in- C. Madras, Nov. 3, 1848.

In this instance a want of proper counsel and advice was nearly bringing into hostile collision two young officers upon a subject, the proper settlement of which deeply concerned the officers of the regiment as a body, and which could only be advanced by a public investigation, which it was the duty of the senior officers to have promoted by a timely report of the circumstances of which they were cognizant to their commanding officer. It is hoped the result of this court-martial will show what is expected from the senior officers of a regiment, whose advice and example so materially tend to influence the conduct of their juniors, and conduce to the peace, good order, and welfare of the military community to which they belong.

(Signed) G. H. F. BERKELEY, Lieut .- General, C .- in-C.

THE YEAR FORTY-EIGHT.

Scarcely within the compass of our annals do we find a year in which the performance at the end fell so short of the promise at the commencement as in that which has just closed. the reins of government were transferred from the hands of Lord Hardinge to those of Lord Dalhousie, the retiring ruler could boast that he had just improved the public balance-sheet by nearly two millions sterling-that he had added three-quarters of a million to the income, and struck off a million and a quarter from the expenditure of the state. The army, which had found to number 620,000 men, he had reduced by about 50,000, leaving it still 70,000 stronger in men, and above 800 stronger in European officers, than it had been on its largest peace establishment in 1837. He had raised the army on the North-West Frontier He had raised the army on the North-West Frontier from 24,000 men and 66 guns, to 52,000 men and 120 guns, while the Sikh troops, with whom it was just possible they might be brought in conflict, had been reduced from 200,000 men with 350 pieces of artillery to 30,000 with 40 guns. Ten thousand men were quartered at Lahore, 7,000 at Ferozepore, and three men were quartered at Lahore, 7,000 at Ferozepore, and three moveable columns, 3,500 strong, with twelve guns and 1,000 Europeans each, were kept in readiness with their full complement of stores and baggage-cattle mustered monthly, to move at a moment's notice. The execution of the Doab Canal, expected to reclaim two millions of acres of ground from approximate sterility, and to relieve two millions of people to the relief of whom Government had the master before contributed half a grope in the course of a single ten years before contributed half a crore in the course of a single season, from the horrors of periodical famine, had been ordered to be renewed. A million sterling was ready to be expended on it in the course of four years, and five thousand labourers were already on their way to begin; while other canals of lesser, but still of stupendous magnitude and incalculable value were in readiness to be begun. The Governor-General had done all he could to forward the interests of railways, and there was a fair prospect of the commencement of the railway system being made both in Gangetic and in Western India. The promotion of education, and public works of all kinds, had become the especial care of Government. Within the Seikh states the most profound tranquillity reigned. In one short year a revenue survey had been all but completed; a census had been made of the capital, conveying in addition to the numbers of the people, statistical returns of the utmost value. Three lahks of rupees were being expended on roads, tanks, and bridges, and six lakhs of rupees were to be bestowed each succeeding year by the Durbar so soon as the state of the treasury allowed it. Arrangements held by many to be injudicious and transient, had assumed the aspect of the utmost solidity, and India seemed assured of peace and prosperity for a long period of years. So stood matters with us in January forty seven. January forty eight finds a British army fifty thousand strong, with 200 pieces of artillery, in the field! One division of 8,000 British troops, with at least twice as many allies, and nearly 100 guns, is compelled to raise the siege of an irregularly fortified town, before an inferior army, and remains three months inactive till a reinforcement stronger than the original force is sent from a neighbouring presidency to its assistance! The Commader-in-Chief of India, at the head of 24,000 men with 100 guns, and thirty thousand others on his flanks or rear, is foiled in a skirmish which ought never to have occurred, and outmaneuvred in a battle which ought to have closed the campaign. An enemy hardly equal to him in numbers, and with scarcely one-third of his guns,—without one single European amongst them,—entraps and destroys some of the finest of his troops, defies him for a fortnight to attack them, and when the opportunity of superior numbers and discipline arrives for moving against them, retires from under our guns without leaving a shadow of a trophy, and takes up a position scarcely a march in advance, where they defy us to assail them! Mismanagement seeks shelter from exposure in a despatch as blundering as were the transactions it was meant to conceal; and gross and transparent misstatement fills up the measure of a soldier's shame. With one of the finest armies, and some of the ablest officers, under him that ever took the field, Lord Gough is compelled to remain for weeks within hearing of the Seikh artillery, not knowing how to turn himself, until reinforcements shall arrive, or the enemy retire from before him in sheer weariness. The whole of Lord Hardinge's arrangements in the Punjab have been upset; not an inch of country remains faithful to us beyond the line of our picquets. Everything like systematic government is for the present at an end, and there is scarcely a leading man in the country beyond the walls of Lahore who has not shown himself a traitor. Instead of being able to set aside an ample balance for peace improvements, all public works throughout India which can be stopped have been suspended, and we are now spending enormously beyond our income, and once more plunging deeper in the mire of debt. So much for the indescribable imbecility of councils which first provoked sedition, and then converted a mismanaged broil into a general insurrection, and transformed insurrection into universal war ;-which refused a moderate force to crush treason in the bud, and when treason had once sprung up, showed how useless was the finest force in unskilful hands." With a hastily collected and inadequately prepared army of 30,000 men, Lord Hardinge conquered the Punjab in defiance of 80,000 of the bravest and best disciplined troops in Asia, with above 200 guns: with 24,000 of the finest soldiers in the world, and 100 guns, the Commanderin-Chief dares not approach a ragged remnant of 30,000 Akhalees, with not one-third of his artillery! To turn shortly to narrative. The auspicious state of events referred to continued to endure till nearly the end of April, when Messrs, Agnew and Anderson, who had been sent with an escort of 500 men to Mooltan to relieve the Governor of the charge of his province, were attacked by the populace, deserted by their escort, and murdered. Three days afterwards, two brigades, of about 6,000 men with 18 guns, were ordered from Lahore the moment the attack was heard of, and counter-ordered so soon as it was known that all was A detachment of 3,000 Seikh troops, under Shere Singh, was despatched instead. Lieut. Edwardes was directed to raise what men he could in the Dherajat, and the Khan of Bahawulpore entreated to move on Mooltan. The two forces being about to join, the enemy attacked them on the 19th June, and were defeated. On the 1st of July the opposing forces again met, and again was Moolraj driven back with the loss of six guns. Unable, from want of heavy artillery, to attempt an attack on the town, the allies remained encamped near it until assistance could be obtained. In the end of August, General Whish arrived to assist them with nearly 8,000 men and 70 guns under him. On the 7th September preparations were made to attempt the town by assault: the storming party were told off, and everything seemed in readiness, when the works were The siege was now carried on by found too strong for storming. regular approaches. During the next four days five officers were killed and twelve wounded, three of whom afterwards died of their wounds: and above 200 men were killed or wounded. the 14th, the guns were opened from the second parallel within 600 yards of the walls, and an immediate assault prepared for,when Shere Singh, with about 5,000 of the durbar troops, went over to the enemy. The siege was immediately raised, and the besieging army retired some miles from the fort and there awaited reinforcements. Brigades were three or four times ordered to move to their aid and then directed to stand fast. At last, when Eckford's brigade was two marches on its way, it was commanded to move on Lahore, it having been determined to place the Commander-in-Chief at the head of an army of 24,000 men with 100 gnns, to march into the interior. On the 9th October, Shere Singh quitted Mooltan with 5,000 men and twelve guns, and proceeded by the line of the Ravee and Chenaub towards the salt range. On the 7th November some severe skirmishing occurred, in which Moolraj lost five guns and otherwise suffered severely. Betwixt the 25th and 30th November some 8,000 Bombay troops, with sixty guns, marched from Roree in Upper Scinde, and joined the besiegers about the 21st December. The Grand Army already referred to having assembled on the Chenaub, about sixty miles beyond Lahore, was taken command of by Lord Gough in person on the 21st November. An ill-arranged reconnoissance, most unwisely converted into an attack, took place the fellowing morning, and occasioned the sacrifice of two of the ablest field-officers of the force, and a loss of about one hundred officers and men, mostly belonging to the 14th dragoons, killed or wounded. Shere Singh, who had, as just stated, quitted Mooltan, on the 9th October, had steadily moved up the river, receiving reinforcements on his way. He took up a strong position, which he fortified with the utmost skill and judgment, opposite Ramnuggur, and decoyed us into the trap just referred to. Unuable to cross the ford in his front, or to expel him from his position, a detachment of 7,000 men with 30 guns was, on the 1st of December, under Sir J. Thackwell, ordered to cross and attack him in flank and rear. The ford at which they were to cross had not been previously surveyed, though our troops had been nearly a month beside it : they had three days in place of one to march before they approached the enemy, who meantime had shifted his position two miles backwards, and went out to give them battle. A cannonade from both sides followed, when Shere Singh withdrew, and entrenched himself on the banks of the Jbelum, twenty-four miles off. A brigade sent out at daybreak to assist Thackwell was unable to join him, though within a few miles of him at starting, till near twilight, when the fighting was over, and the enemy safe away. The Commander-in-Chief, as Thackwell advanced, proceeded to cannonade the enemy across theriver, and after he found them to have withdrawn two miles from him, moved his guns close up to the bank. He knew that Thackwell was about to assail their flank on the 3rd, and that the ford was no longer disputed, but he remained on the left bank all day, and crossed over on the morning of the 4th, when the foe had fled, and pursuit was hopeless! Here he has ever since remained inactive, waiting, apparently, to see whether the enemy might not be wearied into a The Sikhs have meanwhile been joined by further reinforcements, and are now very strongly posted on the Jhelum. The troops at Rhotas joined the insurgents early in Novemberthose at Bunnoo some three weeks after. Major Lawrence and his family, with Lieut. Bowie, have fallen by the treachery of an Affighan into the hands of the Sikhs. Lieut. Herbert still holds Attock, and Captain Abbott maintains himself in the Hazareh country: how long they will do so, under a system of such fearful mismanagement, remains to be seen. The present campaign will cost five millions sterling,—a sum that would have constructed all the railways we at present want. So much for the unhappy public events of Forty-Eight .- The exposures consequent on the failure of the Union Bank have cast a stain on the character of British merchants half a century of good conduct will not wash away. The construction of railways, considered certain at the beginning of the year, is now doubtful, and at present a general cloud overhangs our prospects-shewing all the gloomier from the sunshine under which they opened on us at the commencement of the year. The worst of all is the unsuccess of the first attempt almost ever made by us to maintain peace when we might have chosen war, and to avoid conquest when it was within our reach. It was one of the greatest merits of the policy of Lord Hardinge that it showed men that the British Government in India could afford to be generous-that it was by no means necessary for us at all times to seek occasion for seizing on territory, and concluding a campaign, even when forced on us, by conquest. It shewed that the plea of destiny, under which so many annexations had been made, was fallacious,-that the irresistible necessity under which we excused aggression was a thing of our own creation, to be yielded to or resisted, exactly as it accorded with the rules of justice or suited our convenience. What has now occurred has not only undone all this, but gone far to restore a fallacious and pernicious theory of government to its former position. Men judge of measures by the results which follow them, without examining whether these naturally flow from them or not, or whether evil fruits may not spring from a wise and good system, ably conceived and skilfully and hopefully begun, due to some unlooked-for, and untoward circumstance, rather than to any inherent defects in the original alike beyond the reach of human foresight. On the present occasion, the enemy came during the night and sowed tares amongst the wheat: miserable vacilation and blundering, which, with Lawrence at Lahore, or Hardinge in the country, could never have occurred, and to which all our misfortunes are exclusively attributable, would have gone far to endanger the fidelity of the most trustworthy of our subjects—the peace of our most submissive provinces. Already are we making arrangements for an augmentation and a loan. Luckily on the present occasion it has been resolved to borrow at home, where money, on which six per cent, must be paid in India, may be had at four. The revenues of the Punjaub, which, during the palmy days of Runjeet Singh, scarcely amounted to a million and a half, have been reduced, by the dismemberment of the country, to little more than half this sum. It is estimated by the advocates of annexation, that to guard our new frontier we must add twenty regiments, with a full complement of officers, to our army; and this, at 40,000/. for 1,000 men and officers, will exactly swallow up the whole of the revenue, leaving some half million of civil and other charges to fall on the already overtaxed ryots of India. These views are gloomy—they are not more so than are well warranted by facts. The first Seikh war was forced on us by the Seikha themselves; the present one is the consequence of our own blundering. Our only hope, if once fairly out of this, is to requdiate the cant terms about our fate-our destiny-the thread of opinion -the necessity of maintaining India by the sword, as by this it was won, -and proceed on the common-sense plan of improving our income by honest means-of maintaining good faith, and abstaining from voluntary violence—of strengthening our position and improving our resources-not by increasing while we impoverish our territories, but by beginning to think of the improvement of what we have got, knowing, as we do, that their capabilities are almost unbounded, and have hitherto lain in complete abeyance from the most infatuated and disgraceful neglect. Should we once boldly resolve to attend above all things to the affairs of our own house, and to do our best to atone-by future good conduct-for past transgressions, our prospects may, by the end of 1849, be as bright as they were at the close of Forty-Seven.— Bombay Times, Jan. 3.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Nov. 24, reached Bombay Dec. 28.

PERJURY.—On a case coming before the court, it was declared that a session judge cannot try a case of perjury committed before himself in his capacity of civil or session judge, without a preliminary investigation before a magistrate, and a regular commitment of the accused to the session court.

NATIVE LANGUAGES.—The Right Honourable the Governor in Council has been pleased to resolve, that no military or medical officer shall hereafter be appointed an assistant magistrate in any of the zillahs of the Bombay presidency, until he shall have passed an interpreter's examination in the language of the district in which he may be employed.

CIVIL SERVICE ARRANGEMENTS.—We understand the following changes are likely to take place:—On Mr. Webb's retirement, Mr. Elliot becomes accountant-general. Mr. Simson is to be transferred from the Sudder Adawlut and becomes civil auditor and mint-master. Mr. Simson's place will be filled by Mr. John Warden, just arrived from England.—Bombay Times, Jan. 3.

OPERATIONS ON THE CHENAB. - A correspondent in the farnorth-west assures us that the recent delays in our operations are entirely due to instructions direct, and of the most positive description, from the Governor-General. Lord Dalhousie, indeed, it is affirmed, is anxious to have advices from home before taking the last decisive step-to annex or let alone. If this be correct, it is unfortunate that we should have gone so far as we have done until our minds had been made up. No further harm would or could have occurred had we remained for a time on the hither side of the Chenab, without attacking Shere Singh at all. To have crossed and pushed him from his place, and then halted in his front, looks as if we were afraid or unable to press on. A corps of Rajpoot horse is, we believe, about to be raised immediately-no specific service has been assigned them. are gratified to learn that Colonel Low, agent for the Governor-General in the States of Rajpootonah, is walking stoutly on in the footsteps of his predecessor, and is anxiously following out the system of the late Colonel Sutherland.—Bombay Times, Scinds.—During the last week we were agreeably surprised by a few showers of rain, not, however, in a quantity to do any good except to lay the dust partially. The 27th regiment N.I. is still detained for want of carriage, and we have heard no probable date named for its departure.—We learn from Kotree that Sir H. Lawrence made a most expeditious journey as far as that place, where he embarked on board one of the H. C. steamers; his voyage was not, however, so propitious as his journey—we regret to hear that the steamer was high and dry for two days.—Between 100 and 140 camels, we understand, are to be sent in on Christmas-day, and the 27th regiment with start on the 27th instant.—Kurrachee Advertiser, Dec. 23.

H. M.'s Sloop Ringbown sailed for the Cape and England on the 22nd Dec.

THE SUPERINTENDING-SURGEONCY about to become vacant by the promotion of Dr. Sinclair to the Medical Board, vice Dr. Glen, retired, will be conferred temporarily on Surgeon E. W. Edwardes, just returned from England, during the period Dr. Straker may be absent on service in the field.—Bombay Times.

MALWA OPIUM. - A government notification announces that the duty on Malwa opium will remain fixed at Rs. 400 a chest till May, 1850.

UNITED EAST-INDIA SERVICE CLUB. - We understand that the list of subscribers in this presidency to the United East-India Service Club amounts already to 662, and that many more names are expected to be added thereto before the end of this year.

MOVEMENTS. - From the Gentleman's Gazette we learn that the 24th N.I., and a wing of the 27th N.I. have been ordered from Kurrachee to Shikarpore, where a corps de reserve is to be formed.

THE LEFT WING 22ND N.I., Captain E. C. Beale in command, reached Bombay from Baroda on the 16th Dec. They were accompanied by Lieuts. J. G. Millar and G. E. Stewart, Assistant-surgeon D. Davies, and Ensign W. S. Bruere.

THE 14th N.I., under command of Major C. S. Stuart, reached

Poons on 16th Dec. from Kolapore.

Mr. Ayrton has at last succeeded in securing for the Commercial Bank repayment of the four laks of rupees appropriated by the directors of the Union Bank a twelvemonth since.

BANK OF BOMBAY. - The accounts of the Bank of Bombay, relating to the business of the last six months, which we publish to-day, will be read with interest by many. The bank divides profits at the rate of seven per cent. per annum on the proprietors' capital, which is a reduction of one per cent. on the dividend of the foregoing half-year; but the only thing to be surprised at in this is, that it is so much, rather than so little, everything considered. We notice a great reduction in the amount of bank notes and post bills in circulation, as compared with the same liability this time last year. This may be all safe and proper; and the cause of it at the present time is no secret. Indeed it seems extra safe banking, with a subscribed and deposited capital of more than fifty lacs, to have only about twenty out in this way. This is, however, one of the last things that the public have any right to complain of, and in publicly discussing the affairs of Joint-Stock Companies, so far as they choose to give us the means, we only presume to do so on behalf of the public. Shareholders are supposed to be capable of looking after their own interests, and if they are not it will be a bad look-out for them to expect much advice from the newspapers. Yet if they want any just now, we would counsel them to push a few more of their notes into circulation. They need not be afraid that their credit is exhausted, or that the late "run" has alarmed many on the subject of the Bank's stability, and we do not speak without experience when we assure them that good profits are obtainable by a large issue of paper! — Gentleman's Gozette, Jan. 2.

Annexation of the Punjab. - The Friend of India states that the measure of annexation or non-annexation will be settled by Government as a great question of national policy-by which we understand him to mean that it will be settled apart from all considerations of the justice of the case, or our own right to annex, and without any relation to the advantages which it may confer, or the injuries it may inflict, on the people of India. Giving up, for argument's sake, for the present, the question of right and justice, which we shall assume to be on our side, various other questions arise, on which the whole ought to hinge:—1. Have we any reasonable grounds to apprehend danger from the Sikhs being in our neighbourhood which an advance from the Sutlej to the Indus would remove? 2. Does the line of the Indus at all improve our frontier, or diminish the grounds of our apprehension from invasion? 3. Or, supposing that it does so, is the superior safety thus purchased worth the price required to be paid for it in increased military charges? 4. Would annexation increase the happiness of the population of the country of the five rivers, or add to the wealth and prosperity of our present subjects? One of the greatest curses the human race can suffer from is to be misled by delusive or meaningless terms, and in this category do we include the term "National Policy," in so far as it means any other thing than the policy which immediately and directly benefits the nation. The Calcutta Star, in writing on the question, very pertinently observes that the present insurrection is entirely due to ourselves; that we undertook to maintain the peace on being paid for the task; and that through our own monstrous and inexplicable mismanagement alone the present state of affairs had come into existence. To seize the country because of a rebellion of which we ourselves were the leading cause, would be violating the first principle of law, which forbids men to take advantage of their own transgressions. The view is to us a new one, but it is at the same time one which it would be very difficult to meet. - Bombay Times.

SALE OF A WIFE. - In the Small Cause Court, an action was brought by one native against another to recover Rs. 335, paid by the plaintiff to the defendant (a matrimonial agent) to supply him with a wife not less than ten and not exceeding eleven years of age. The cause of action was that the lady was little more than nine years old. The plaintiff, however, was non-suited.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY. - Rumour at present is loud on the subject of a large addition being made to the Bengal army, -an arrangement which will swallow up as much money as would construct a hundred miles of railway being of course considered subject of much congratulation to the country. It seems to be forgotten that when the army was, in 1847, reduced by some 54,000 men, it was still left 60,000 stronger than it had been before the Affghan war was begun, when it was abundantly adequate for all the duties imposed on it,—the armies of Scinde, the Punjab, Affghanistan, and Gwalior being then unsubdued. But the augmentation wants half its attractions unless it involves the raising of additional regiments and an increase of officers as well as men. It seems also to have been forgotten that the augmentations of 112,000 men, which occurred betwixt 1837 and 1846, were attended with an addition of 830 European officers; and that when 200 men were, in the latter year, struck off the roll of each regiment, not one European officer was removed. Were 50,000 men added to our muster-roll, without a single European officer, our regiments would be as well officered as they were during the Affghan, Scindian, Gwalior, and Sutlej campaigns .- Bombay Times.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

SCINDE DIVISION OF THE BOMBAY ARMY

Bombay Castle, Dec. 13, 1848 .- The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to notify that the troops in Scinde are hereafter to be regarded as constituting a division of the Bombay army, but the command is to continue a separate appointment, distinct from the established divisional commands of this presidency, until the receipt of final orders from the Hon. the Court of Directors.

The province of Cutch and station of Bhooj are to form a part

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

Tuesday Afternoon, 5 o'clock, 2nd Jan. 1849 .- Our market for imports generally continues in the favourable state noticed in our last report as then existing. Supplies of manufactures have been to a limited extent, and as they have been moved off as quickly as received, our market continues very bare of most descriptions of fabrics, and an increasing disposition is manifested by dealers to anticipate the expected arrivals.

Our Money Market is easy, and we have no new feature to

CEYLON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Circular, from the Colonial Secretary's Office, Colombo, dated 16th November, announces that the Governor intends to propose the abandonment of the dog ordinance, that respecting the registration and licensing of certain traders, and the shop-While making these concessions, however," the Circular adds, "His Excellency is firmly determined to carry out without delay the ordinance passed last session respecting the roads, which he is satisfied is calculated in a great degree to conduce to the convenience and comfort of the whole community, and no trouble will be spared on his part in expediting the completion of the preliminary arrangements. These cannot now be completed by the time originally proposed, and it will be necessary to make them available in the different districts from time to time as circumstances will admit. But the Governor cannot too positively discountenance any expectation that the people of a particular province or district will find it in their power to evade compliance with the ordinance during the ensuing year by any wilful resistance or obstruction. The ordinance does not enact that all males must either work six days or pay the commutation in every year. It simply provides that they shall be liable so to do if required, and if their labour can be beneficially applied within the distance allowed by the ordinance. It is not e Governor's intention to make a heavy demand for labour for the principal roads during the first year, but to leave a large amount at the disposal of the provincial committees, to be applied with discretion to the works which the native population will feel more immediately interested in."

The committee of the Executive are very busy with the contemplated reductions in salaries. They will be of a most sweeping nature, even to the abolition of several offices which have hitherto been considered as almost patent. Possibly a saving to the extent of £30,000 a year may be effected.—Ceylon Times, Nov. 10.

We are sorry to learn that a most serious accident occurred to Major Parke, our respected commissary-general, on Friday last. Major Parke was stepping into his phacton opposite the United Service Library, and whilst in the act of adjusting the reins they fell from his hands on the back of his horse, which started off at full speed in the direction of St. Peter's Church, and on coming in contact with the corner of the auditor-general's office the phaeton was violently upset, throwing Major Parke on his head. Being taken up insensible, he was instantly bled and conveyed to his residence in Colpetty, under great apprehensions that fracture of the skull or concussion of the brain had taken place. On Saturday serious apprehensions were entertained, but on Sunday we hear a change took place, and he was pronounced out of danger; yesterday a slight fever appeared, the result of the heavy shock he had received, but he was doing well.—Times, Dec. 5.

On Saturday, Dec. 2, Messrs. Venn Preston & Co., submitted to public competition the following properties:—Donnekeya Sallaye, in the district of Saffragam, belonging to the estate of Messrs. Hudson Chandler and Co., comprising 479 acres of forest land unplanted was disposed of for £40. A coffee estate belonging to the late Mr. J. G. Hillebrand at Kaduganava, of 420 acres. 100 planted was bought in by the mortgages at £1,500, a boná fide bid was made of £1,450. The well-known properties belonging to the estate of Mr. Maitland in Ambegammoe, were offered, but did not sell, for Barcaple only £200 was bid, and for Dundrennan £300.

There is a flying report of another insurrection in the Central Province, which after making due inquiry we believe to be unfounded.

We stop the press to say that troops have been sent out to Matelle. — Ceylon Examiner, Dec. 9.

GENERAL ORDER.

DISTURBANCES IN CEYLON.

Colombo, Dec. 2, 1848.—The Major-General Commanding the Forces has been requested by his Exc. the Right Hon. the Governor to communicate to the troops the following extract from a despatch received by his Exc. from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, having reference to the recent disturbances in Covin.—

"You will direct the Major-General commanding the troops to signify to Lieut.-Colonel Drought, and the officers and men who were employed, her Majesty's approbation of their services. The speedy suppression of the insurrection seems to have been in a great measure due to the able and judicious manner in which Lieut.-Colonel Drought availed himself in the first instance of the small force under his command, and to the courage and steadiness with which both officers and men acted against the large number of the insurgents."

PERSIA.

Letters from Bushire, dated the 24th November, state that the son and successor of Mahomed Shah, Nussur-ood-Deen, who was at Tabriz at the time of his father's death, was immediately proclaimed king, under the auspices of the English and Russian ambassadors, and a council appointed until he arrived. He is said to be very partial to us, and to be surrounded by a staff of English officers, so that it is probable our star will soon be in the ascendant in Persia. It was considered certain that the young prince had reached the capital on the 17th October, and had quietly ascended the throne on the 22nd. Firmans in his name had been received both at Shiraz and at Bushire, but they had been despatched prior to the king's arrival at Teheran. The country around the capital was quiet, but the more remote districts were in a very disturbed state. Meshid continued in the hands of the insurgents.—Bombay Times, Dec. 16.

BURMESE EMPIRE.

Rangoon.—By the arrival of the Tharrawaddy Merchant, letters have been received from Rangoon, dated the 20th ultimo. The old Shahbunder, a Burman, had arrived there with immense powers. This notable semi-barbarian has it now in his power to exercise his brutality and vicious propensities, to any extent he may please. Mr. Isaac, who was turned out of the country some time ago, has obtained permission to enter it again. He left yesterday for Rangoon and Ava, his wife and family being at the latter place.

The schooner Thistle, from this port to Rangoon, was dashed on a sandbank near the Elephant Point, in a gale of wind, and broken to pieces; we regret to say two lives were lost. The schooner Peter Arakiel, bound to Calcutta from Rangoon, with a cargo of timber, grounded between Baraguay Point and China Baker; fortunately all lives were saved. It is said that, in all probability, she will be got off on discharging her cargo.

No new arrivals from Calcutta since last advices.—Maulmain Chronicle, Nov. 1.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Strong and almost irresistible evidence that the East was the cradle of the human race is deducible from the fact that the fables, apologues, and familiar tales which form a principal part of the nursery and romantic literature of European nations, and bear unequivocal tokens of being the products of a primitive age, are traceable to the East. This fact itself is scarcely disputed; "by whatever channel they may have been conveyed to the West," observes Mr. Wilson, in his Analytical Account of the Pancha Tantra,* "the Oriental origin of most of the tales, which first roused the inventive faculties of our ancestors, is universally admitted; and the advocates of the Gothic or Arabic origin of Romance agree in referring its birth-place to the East." Mr. Wilson has identified various tales found in the work he analysed,-which is the source from whence the Fables of Pilpay and other old Eastern collections were drawn,—with stories in the Novelles and Fabliaux of Italian and Provencial writers, and pointed out incidents in some of these tales which establish incontestably their Indian origin.

Some other instances may be enumerated, leading to the same conclusion. A well-known apologue in the ancient collection which goes by the name of Æsop's Fables, the "Husbandman's Sons," is found amongst the traditions of an Eastern nation, without a literature, and which could have had no intercourse with Greece. In the Greek original, the husbandman is represented as calling his sons around him, and placing a bundle of rods ( $\dot{\rho}\dot{a}\dot{c}\dot{\delta}oi$ ) in their hands, which he told them to break; upon their acknowledging their inability to accomplish the task, he showed them how easily the whole might be broken if each rod were separately dealt with; adding the moral, that, conjoined in friendly union they would be invincible, whereas, separated by discord, their ruin would be easy.

This incident is recorded by Chinese historians as having really occurred at the Court of a Toorkish or Tartar tribe located on the frontiers of their empire. O-chae, a shen-yu (ruler) of the Too-keuh-hwans, when on his death-bed, called into his presence his twenty sons, and taking a bundle of the same number of arrows, gave one to the eldest, and told him to break it, which he did easily; he then desired him to break the other nineteen at once, which neither he nor any of his brothers was able to do. The dying prince then demonstrated to them how essential combination was to their safety, and how weak they would be when disunited by separate views and interests.

Most readers are familiar with the incident in Voltaire's novel of Zadig, in which the hero of the tale minutely describes all the characters and qualities of the Queen of Babylon's palfrey, without having seen it, from certain indications appearing along the road it passed. Whence Voltaire borrowed this incident is not apparent; but it is pretty clear that he could not have derived it from the original source, in Southern India.

In the Alakswara Katha, a series of storics in the Tamul language, forming part of the Mackenzie Collection (vol. i. p. 220), is the story of the Rajah of Alakapur, in which we find the identical incident:—

"In the reign of Alakendra Raja, King of Alaka Puri, it happened that four persons of respectability were travelling on the high road, when they met with a merchant who had lost one of his camels. Entering into conversation with him, one of the travellers inquired if the camel was not lame in one of its legs; another asked if it was not blind of the right eye; the third asked if the tail was not unusually short; and the fourth demanded if it was not subject to the cholic. They were answered in the affirmative by the merchant, who was satisfied they must have seen the animal, and eagerly demanded where they had met it. They replied, they had seen traces of the camel, but not the camel itself; which, being inconsistent with the minute acquaintance they seemed to possess, the merchant accused them of being thieves, and having stolen his beast, and immediately applied to the raja for redress. The raja, on hearing the merchant's story, was equally impressed with the belief that the travellers must know what had become of the camel, and, sending for them, he threatened them with his extreme displeasure if they did not confess the truth. How could they know, he demanded, the eamel was lame or blind, that the tail was long or short, or that it was subject to any malady, unless they had it in their possession. On which they severally explained the reasons that had induced them to express their belief of these particulars. The first observed, I noticed in the foot-marks of the animal that one was deficient, and I concluded accordingly that he was lame in one of his legs. The second said, I noticed the leaves of the trees on the left side of the road had been snapped or torn off, whilst those on the right side were untouched, whence I concluded the animal was blind in his right eye. The third remarked, I saw a number of drops of blood on the road, which I conjectured bad flowed from the bites of gnats and flies, and thence supposed the camel's tail was shorter than usual, in consequence of which he could not brush the insects away. The fourth said, I observed that, whilst the fore feet of the camel were planted firmly in the ground, the hiod ones appeared to have scarcely touched it, whence I guessed they were contracted by pain in the belly of the animal. The king, when he heard their explanations, was much struck by the sagacity of the parties, and, giving the merchant a sum of money to console him for the loss of the camel, he made these four persons his principal ministers."

One of the most remarkable instances of the identification of a Western tale with its Eastern prototype is exhibited in the story of Shylock and the pound of flesh. The origin of this story long eluded the persevering research of all the Commentators of Shakespeare, who ransacked the literature of Europe in order to discover the sources of his non-historical dramas. At length, the late Sir. Thomas Munro (then an ensign in the native army of India) found the original of Shylock in a Persian tale, "The Cadi of Emessa," which he communicated to Mr. Malone, who stated the fact in his notes to the Merchant of Venice. A lively translation of the entire Persian tale, which comprehends other incidents, is given in that amusing collection of papers entitled Anglo-India. The substance is this: An affluent Jew and a Musulman merchant lived in the same city. The latter, being in want of money to trade with, begged a loan of 100 dinars from the Jew, who, having been smitten with the beauty of the Mu-sulman's wife, hoped that he might by means of this loan ruin the merchant, and gain his wife. With this motive, he said to the Musulman, playfully, that if he would give him the pledge he required, he should have the loan without interest. "Consent," said he, "that if you do not pay me the money by a certain day, I shall cut off a pound of flesh from your body." The Musulman at first made wry faces at this proposal, but at length, pressed by necessity, he consented, and setting off on a journey, engaged in his mercantile transactions so successfully, that he was able before the stipulated date to send the 100 dinars to his wife, who, being at the time in straits for want of money, and not knowing the nature of the pledge her husband had given, applied it to her household purposes, and the penalty of the bond was incurred. The Musulman was returning home with large gains, when he fell amongst thieves, who robbed him of all, and he returned home as poor as he left it. The relentless Jew claimed his pledge; the matter came before the cadi, who decided that the pledge had been forfeited; but the Musulman protesting against this decree, both parties agreed to refer the question to the Cadi of Emessa, a man of great wisdom and high reputation for strict justice. This judge, having heard the case, determined that the forfeiture had really been incurred, and turning to the Jew, said, "Arise, take the knife, and cut off your pound of flesh; but see that there be not a grain more or less; your just claim is exactly one pound, and if you take over or under, though ever so little, I will consign you to the governor, who will put you to death." The Jew replied, "It is not possible to cut exactly a pound;" but the cadi told him he must do so, or take the consequences. The Jew, thereupon, renounced his claim, and said he would forgive the debt altogether. "Very well," said the cadi; "but as you have brought the man so far on a claim you cannot maintain, it is but reasonable that you should make him some compensation." point was referred to arbitration, and the damages were assessed at 200 dinars, which the Jew paid.

THE NATIVE INDIAN ARMY.—The war against the Affghans amply proved the efficiency and capability of the native soldier. The Musulman is not so effeminate, yet as brave, trustworthy, and enduring as the Hindoo; but is not so temperate. Both, however, require to be led by an European officer: if they lose their confidence in him, they give themselves up for lost. They are ready to risk their lives for their officers, and are filially attached to them. During our march, officers and privates of the native troops frequently came from the distance of many miles to see their European officer, and to recall the good old times; and they part from their officers like children from their parents. They even exchange letters with them.—Von Orlich's Travels.

Many of the large manufacturers in Lancashire and the West Riding find it worth their while to employ skilful mechanics, at high salaries, for no other purpose than to suggest improvements in the machinery; the result is, that their factories contain specimens of contrivance surpassing any other in the world: some of the mechanism used in cotton-printing, or in the "differential box" for supplying cotton to the spinning-frames, is beyond comparison superior, in delicacy and ingenuity, to the most complex movements of a chronometer.—Edinb. Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

FRIDAY, February 2, 1849.

The private accounts of the sanguinary cavalry affair at Ramnuggur, on the 22nd November, in the absence of any official despatch establishing the main facts, are so obscure and discordant, that we have found it difficult to collect from them a distinct notion of its incidents, and of the true cause of the severe loss which attended this partial encounter. We have read at least twenty reports, published and unpublished, from as many eye-witnesses, all more or less at variance with each other, and sketches of the exact positions of the British and Sikh forces have contributed but little to reconcile their apparent discrepancies.

It would appear from a draught sketch, now before us, of the relative positions of the two armies on the morning of the 22nd, that the main body of the Sikhs was disposed along the right bank of the Chenab, where that river suddenly widens, being divided into two chanels by a small island in mid-stream. Strong field-works and batteries of heavy guns protected their main position, and guns were likewise placed in battery along the margin of the river to the eastward. The island, which was opposite to the centre of the Sikh position, was occupied by 4,000 men, and a battery. The branch of the river, which separated the island from the left bank, is about thirty yards wide, and the water did not exceed three or four feet in depth, to which there is an abrupt fall from the bank of almost five feet. This was called the "nullah;" the main branch, which flowed on the other side of the island, is considered to be the river, and this, though not so wide as the nullah, is not fordable.

It is obvious that this was a position of great strength, and as the Sikhs had recently occupied the very ground, which was broken and sandy, upon which the British forces were moving, they were thoroughly acquainted with its disadvantages, and had probably ascertained by practice the range of their guns over every part of it; much caution was therefore indispensable in conducting even a reconnoissance.

When the British troops came up, small parties of Sikhs were still remaining on the left bank of the river, some squatted under the high bank of the nullah, others retiring apparently from Ramnuggur; they were driven by the cavalry (the 3rd Dragoons and the 8th Light Cavalry) across the river. The Horse Artillery, which joined in this service, pushed on with eagerness through deep sand, opening their fire upon the enemy on the other side, but soon found that their 6-pounders were very ill-matched with the heavy metal of the enemy, and they were compelled to retire, leaving behind one of their guns and two ammunition waggons, which were too deeply embedded in the sand to be moved. The enemy, seeing this, crossed over a large body of cavalry (3,000 or 4,000), under cover of his guns; but they were, as appears, charged several times by the 3rd and 14th Dragoons, and the 5th and 8th Light Cavalry, and, as all accounts say, on every occasion overthrown and driven back; but they always found shelter under their own artillery.

At length, Colonel Havelock appears to have received orders or permission to make a more serious attack upon this body. Most of the letters say that the order was given by the Commander-in-chief; one writer asserts that the movement was directed by Brigadier General Cureton; but neither Lord Gough nor the gallant Cureton would probably have ventured with 500 sabres to assail a body of 4,000 Sikh cavalry, and follow them to their batteries, had he been aware of the facts, that there was a branch of the river four feet deep in their way; that the island was strongly occupied; that the descent to the nullah was precipitous, and that the bed of it was occupied by marksmen of the enemy, and swept by his guns, which infiladed it from the left of the enemy's position on the right bank of the river.

The word, however, was given; the brave fellows (the 14th Dragoons and 5th Light Cavalry) advanced at a trot, in close column of squadrons, in the teeth of volleys from the Sikh artillery. The opposing body of cavalry appeared to give way; the order, "form line to front," was scarcely issued, when they came upon the nullah, full of men. Still ignorant of their real situation, the colonel and many of his brave men of the 14th leaped down the steep bank into the nullah, which they dashed through, halted and formed upon the island, charging horse and foot, in the face of the Sikh batteries. They retired to join the other squadron of the 14th coming up, re-formed, and again charged, but only to be moved down by the destructive fire of the enemy, cross and direct. In this second charge, Colonel Havelock and many noble fellows fell. In spite of their loss, after again retiring, they formed once more, and charged a third time, under Colonel King; but now Brigadier-General Cureton arrived, and ordered them back: at this moment, two matchlock balls struck him to the earth.

The disaster,—for such it must be frankly admitted to be,—may thus be attributed to ignorance of the obstacles in the way of success, which were insuperable by the force opposed to them; and especially to the too great ardour of troops; "it was a rush," says one of the letters, "who should get at the enemy first."

It is far from our intention to drop a syllable in condemnation of any one; but, considering that the object of the movement was merely "to ascertain the position and strength of the enemy;" that the British troops were in the presence of a force of 30,000 men, strongly entrenched, and that experience had amply proved the European skill and desperate resolution of the Sikhs, as well as their Oriental subtlety, we cannot refrain from expressing regret that any circumstances should have brought about this untoward affair, which might have been still more disastrous. "Had the 14th not been broken by jumping into the nullah," says the writer of a letter published in the Times, "more than half the regiment must have been destroyed, so severe was the fire, as all the shot, had they charged in close order, would have taken effect."

A curious circumstance, connected with the infant children of Europeans in India, is that, where they are much affected by the climate, they absolutely appear to cease to grow, and, at the age of from one to three years, will go on from month to month without the smallest increase of bulk: their little clothes never require to be enlarged. Yet on being put on board of ship, and sent to sea, they at once take a start, and shoot up to their proper size. Nature has evidently intended that the blood of Europe should never people the plains of India.—Anglo-India.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

House of Lords, Feb. 1.

Opening of the Session.—Her Majesty opened the Session of Parliament in person. In the speech from the throne, there is the following paragraph:

"A rebellion of a formidable character has broken out in the Punjaub, and the Governor-General of India has been compelled, for the preservation of the peace of the country, to assemble a considerable force, which is now engaged in military operations against the insurgents. But the tranquillity of British India has not been affected by these unprovoked disturbances."

MISCELLANEOUS.

TROOPS FOR INDIA.—A paragraph has been the round of the papers, to the effect that the East-India Company has applied to Government for three regiments for India. We are inclined to think our contemporaries have confounded the supposed application with the embarkation of three regiments which have just sailed from Cork for India. We cannot learn that three additional regiments have been applied for, and it will probably prove not to be the case.

COAL IN THE STRAITS OF MAGELLAN.—The perquisitions of Capt. Henderson, of H.M.'s steam-vessel Sampson, have established the existence of veins of coal near Punta Arenas (Sandy Bay), about seven miles distant from the bay, on the north bank of the river, a road being practicable to the shore, materials for making it being found on the spot. The coal is of good quality, and the veins, which have not been worked by the Chili government, may be worked with great ease.

The Patent Diatonic Flute.—Believing that amongst the readers of the Mail there are many connexions of the services whose musical tastes lead them to patronize the flute as a means of recreation, a few words explanatory of the merits of a recently patented invention, the Diatonic flute of Mr. Siccama, may not be thrown away. From an examination of Mr. Siccama's improvements in this favourite musical instrument with amateurs, we can say, without hesitation, that the Diatonic flute is the most easy on which to perform we have hitherto tried. It requires but little exertion in playing, and its tones are of the mellowest quality, and permitting of such variations as warrant the Diatonic appellation. We therefore think the instrument worthy the patronage of every amateur as well as professional flute-player.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—At a meeting of dissentient shareholders of the East Indian Railway, held Jan. 23, at the London Tavern, Sir John Campbell, K.C.H., in the chair, the following resolution was unanimously adopted—"That since of late it has been made manifest that the original anticipations of profits, held out by the directors in their first report, could not be realized by the limited undertaking in which it is now proposed to embark, and that the guarantee, instead of being equivalent to a 5 per cent. Government stock, as stated by the Directors, in the opinion of this meeting is a mere contribution which would probably be wholly absorbed by the cost of maintaining and working the line, there remains no reasonable inducement to the shareholders to pursue the enterprize further; and it is consequently desirable to dissolve the company in the most speedy and inexpensive manner, and release the shareholders from the responsibilities incidental thereto.

INDIAN RAILWAYS .- Last week we intimated that the committee, appointed at the India House to consider the question of Indian railways had decided against granting any amelioration of terms to the East-Indian or Indian Peninsula Railway Companies. On Tuesday last, a meeting of the dissentient share-holders of the East-India Railway was held at the London Tavern (as will be seen by reference to our reports of meetings) to protest against further pretexts of delay in the dissolution of the company; and, on the following day, a Court of the Hon. East-India Company was held, when the report of the railway committee of the previous week was received and confirmed. The East-Indian Railway Company, and, we suppose, the Great Indian Peninsula Company also, may therefore be looked upon as virtually extinct, so that a clear field now remains for more skilful and more fastidious adventurers in the domain of Indian railways. That railways must be made in India is obvious enough, but it is quite as clear that they can never be made by the existing companies, which have demonstrated their utter inefficiency. In the East-Indian Railway Company in particular, not only is there an absence of an intelligible project, but the directors, though "all honourable men," have clearly lost the confidence of their constituents, as we think the meeting to which we have already adverted sufficiently demonstrates. Some of the daily papers, which are possessed of much eloquence and but little information, are denouncing in strong terms both the India House and Board of Control for the miscarriage of the companies, upon which the execution of Indian railways appears. in their judgment, to depend; but we believe it will not be difficult to show that the result they deplore is a step towards the establishment of Indian railways, and the most important step in advance which has been taken for some years. We are unable this week to afford the space necessary to adduce the proofs on which this doctrine rests, but we intend to do so on an early occasion; and as all our views upon this subject have heretofore received such a singularly exact confirmation, it will be no unreasonable demand, we conceive, upon the faith of our readers, if we ask for their provisional acquiescence in the conclusions here propounded. The existing railway companies have for some time past occupied a merely obstructive position, and by a cheap method of exculpation they have thrown the blame of all their faults and follies with their inevitable consequences upon the India House and the Board of Control; but we shall be able to show that latterly, at least, the only fault of those high departments has been their mistaken indulgence to crumbling companies, which events have shewn cannot be supported with effect, and which, like any other rubbish, ought long ago to have been completely swept away. - Railway Chronicle, Jan. 27.

Messes. Eglinton and Co.—We regret to have to announce to-day the failure of Messes. Robert Eglinton and Co., a highly respectable East-India firm. The liabilities of the house a year or two back must have been heavy, but a considerable reduction has since been effected in them, and it is understood they will not now prove large. During the commercial crisis it was said Messes. Eglinton and Co. received assistance from the Bank of England and the British Linen Company, and it is a refusal from Scotland of a renewal of this aid, the term of which has just expired, that the necessity for suspension is attributed.— Times, Jan. 29, 1849.

MILITARY PAY will be issued at the Treasury, East-India House, on Monday, Feb. 12, and following days.

THE ship Amathea has been engaged for the conveyance of stores to Calcutta.

THE DEATH OF THE FIRST LORD CLIVE is thus related by Horace Walpole, in one of his letters to the Countess of Ossory, recently edited by Mr. Vernon Smith: "Lord H. has just been here, and told me the manner of Lord Clive's death. Whatever had happened, it had flung him into convulsions, to which he was very subject. Dr. Fothergill gave him, as he had done on like occasions, a dose of laudanum; but the pain in his bowels was so violent that he asked for a second dose. Dr. Fothergill said, if he took another he would be dead in an hour. The moment Fothergill was gone, he swallowed another, for another it seems stood by him, and he is dead."

THE CITY OF SOO-CHOW-FOO.—Every one who has been in China, or who is at all acquainted with Chinese history, has heard of this renowned city. "If a stranger," says Mr. Fortune, "enters a shop in Hong-Kong, in Canton, or in any other of the towns of the south, he is sure to be told, when he inquires the price of any curiosity out of the common way, that it has been brought from this celebrated place. Let him order any thing superb, it must be sent for from Soo-Chow; fine pictures, fine carved work, fine silks, fine ladies, all come from Soo-chow. It is the Chinaman's earthly paradise, and it would be hard indeed to convince him that it had its equal in any town on earth."

The authors of the Ihhwan al Safa compare the animal economy with the systems of the heavens. According to them, everything is formed under the influence of the stars, and must, therefore, bear a resemblance to them. This is the leading idea of the natural sciences of the Arabs. Every element is predominant in one part of the body: in the head, fire; in the chest, air; in the abdomen, water; in the lower extremities, on which the body rests, earth. This idea has been revived and expanded by Professor Oken, in his Natural History.—Dr. A. Sprenger.

THE ESPLANADE, the fashionable "Hyde Park," of Bombay, is far better than the Course at Calcutta, the number of superb turn-outs the Parsees drive making it far more gay: many of these people are immensely rich, and think nothing of giving 300 guiness for a buggy-horse.—Fane's Five Years in India.

THE KALMUCKS, on the Chinese frontier, possess powers of enduring hunger and thirst, and a voracity which is almost incre-dible. Their chief animal food is mutton, of which they consume enormous quantities when they can procure supplies; but no kind of flesh comes amiss, including that of the horse, and they care not whether the animal died a natural death, and are indifferent about the cooking. They are ridiculously timid, and, perhaps, the most indolent people in the world, and will often sacrifice their property rather than take a little trouble to preserve it. Their religious rites are a sort of bargain with the deity, and when their requests are disregarded, the Kalmuck wreaks his vengeance on the images of his gods by whipping, beating, or trampling them under foot.—M. Tchihatcheff.

THE GOLD MINES OF RUSSIA.—The mineral wealth derived from these mines has proved, on the whole, injurious to the people engaged in gold finding, and detrimental to the true welfare of the country. The gain is far less than might appear, when only the quantity of the precious metal is taken into account, though this is rapidly increasing, having risen from 260 lbs. in 1830 to 75,215 lbs. in 1846. The total amount in the ten years preceding 1846 was 368,0631bs., worth £18,760,000. Yet it is only the lowness of the wages, from 10s. to 30s. a month, that enables these mines to be wrought profitably.

According to the Ikhwan al Safa, the world is a human being magnified; and the system of the world is contained in the units of the decimal system.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

The Ship, its Origin and Progress; being a General History from its first Invention to the latest Improvements; forming a complete Account of the Naval Events of the Ancients, the Middle Ages, and the Modern Epochs, to the close of 1848, including the state of the Navies of all Nations; Episodes and Lines of Shipping; Discoveries, Colonization, and Commerce; &c. Illustrated with plates. By FRANCIS STEINITZ. London. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THE title of this work, which we have quoted in full, will give the reader an approximate, though imperfect, idea of the multifariousness of its contents. It embraces almost every subject with which the ship has the most remote relation. From the mere rudiments of the art of navigation,—the raft and the hollow tree,-Mr. Steinitz conducts us through the naval history of all nations down to the present time, when the invention of and improvements in steam-navigation have already given a new impulse and new character to the art. It is not the ship alone which has occupied his labours; all its separate parts, the oars, the rudder, the sails, the compass,-all the minutiæ of the construction of ships,—are laboriously investigated and familiarly explained. The great bulk of the work is, of course, dedicated to the British naval history; in the course of which all the chief engagements are described and illustrated with professional minuteness and precision; but the navies of Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, and America, are copiously treated of, and maritime affairs are connected by brief references to other transactions, so as to form a sketch of the history of the world. The accounts of the progress of steam-navigation, of the present state of the French navy, of that of the United States, and of the project for a German navy, contain many valuable facts. Nor is the subject of the Navigation Laws overlooked. Altogether, it is a work of stupendous industry.

In a curious account given in the Appendix, of all kinds of vessels, and of inventions relating to the ship, Mr. Steinitz has described a "Flying or Air Ship," invented by a Portuguese priest, named Bartholomew Laurent, by which the said priest proposed to navigate the air as readily as we do the sea, by sails, rudder, wings, &c. The figure of the machine and the explanation of it afford an amusing specimen of the absurdities which formerly passed current as useful inventions.

Cocks' Musical Almanack for 1849. London. R. Cocks

THE above is the title of an almanack which has just been issued. It contains more useful and miscellaneous information than is given in most ordinary almanacks; also a list of musical societies, with their boards of management, days of meeting, &c., and a series of interesting events connected with music and musicians.

It will, undoubtedly, be admitted that all those who profess to take any interest in music, should make themselves acquainted with some particulars regarding the career of the best composers and performers, and the precise epoch when every distinguished musician and vocalist flourished. In Cocks' Musical Almanack the desired information may be obtained at a cheap rate.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE METEMPSYCHOSIS is sometimes made a medium of fraud in China. Two hungry bonzes, coming near a rich peasant's farm-yard, began weeping, telling the peasant's wife that two fat ducks in the yard were inhabited by the souls of their fathers. The dame could do no less than consign the ducks to their filial care, and the bonzes made a hearty dinner

THE KIRCHEEZ enjoy an acuteness of sight, hearing, and nell, which is astonishing. Where a European can see only a smell, which is astonishing. Where a European can see only a dim speck in the desert, the Kirgheez can discover it to be a man, and distinguish his tribe; and they can determine localities by the taste or scent of the plants. Their local memory is so the taste or scent of the plants. exact that, on one occasion, an old blind warrior guided a Russian troop above 120 miles across the steppe, inquiring occasionally the forms of hills and direction of streams.

"RESOLUTIONS.

"N. GRAHAM.

"That, by the treaty concluded between the East-India Company and his late Highness Pertaub Singh, Rajah of Sattara, on the 25th September, 1819, the territories of Sattara were secured to him and to his heirs in perpetual sovereignty. That, by the supplemental treaty of September, 1839, the said territories were confirmed to his brother, Appa Sahib, as the next collateral heir and successor, and to his heirs, on the same terms as specified in the treaty of September, 1819.

"That this Court has heard with feelings of the deepest surprise and alarm of the contemplated seizure, confiscation, and annexation, by the East-India Company, of the Sattara territories, in violation of the rights of the lawful heir: believing, as this Court does, that such seizure, confiscation, and annexation, would be a most flagrant breach of the said treaties so solemnly entered into and confirmed, would be a disgrace and stain upon the British character, and would seriously weaken the confidence hitherto reposed by the princes and people of India in the justice and good faith of the East-India Company and of the British Government.

"That, under such circumstances, this Court deems it to be their imperative duty to declare their solemn conviction of the impolicy and danger, no less than of the injustice, of such a proceeding, and to express their earnest hope that the Court of Directors and the Board of Control will withhold their sanction from such a measure."

n the Eastern and Southern Seas. By LEITCH RITCHIE. 2 vols. 8vo. 24s.

"The title of the book will show its comprehensive character, and those who wish to have an Encyclopedia of Information on Eastern and Southern history, government, literature, mannere, productions (natural and industrial), commerce, verything, in fact, but physical science, and not without a good deal even on that, will here find what they require. It is a condensation of the contents of multifarious volumes, and may justly be termed many things in few words. If read, it will impart to the student nearly all that is known on the subject to which it relates, and afford him, withat, much entertainment. If kept as a book of reference, few questions relating to Eastern affairs can arise for which it will not furnish a complete answer."—INDIAM AIL.

"It is the best introduction with which we are acquainted to a more minute and extensive study of Eastern history."—ATLAS.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:—

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

2. Premiums may be asid and claims astitud as Sydney where there is a Band manent residence.

2. Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

3. A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; not is it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

The Annuitles offered by the Company are on a more favourable scale than those offered by any other Companies, having been calculated with reference to the rates of Interest obtainable on Colonal Investments. Annuitants also participate in the profits.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both millimers and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The London General Mourning Warehouse, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street,—W. C. JAY, Proprietor.

*g* This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—vlz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDISTANI GRAMMAR in the Oriental and Roman

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forning a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahart, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. "This work can be honestly recommended to all who are desirous of acquiring the elements of the Hindustani language, or of making themselves understood among the people of this country. We have sendom, if ever, seen such a small pocket-companion with such a variety of useful instruction. The language of the Vocabulary and of the Dialogues appears quite unexceptionable. Any one acquainted with Hindustani will at once recognize its idiomatic accuracy, and cheerfully recommend it to the notice of all those who desire to come out to India not allogether unprepared to convey their own wishes to those who surround them."—Friend of India, published at Serampore.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE first Act of the Punjab drama has closed; the city of Mooltan has been captured by the British forces, "after one of the most obstinate and gallant defences on the part of the enemy," observes the Bombay Times, " ever recorded in our annals." The courage and resolution of the Sikh garrison, against such overwhelming odds, whilst confirming and establishing their claims to a high military reputation, tend to justify the prudence of the British commander, in restraining the ardour of his soldiers, and not incurring unnecessary risks,-a quality which is of inappreciable value in one charged with such heavy responsibility, although too often, as in the instance of General Whish. stigmatized as "over-caution," a gentle name for timidity.

The advices brought by the last mail from Mooltan announced the arrival of the Bombay column; but we were led to underrate the amount of force placed by its junction at the disposal of General Whish, which amounted to 15,000 British troops and 17,000 allies, making an aggregate of 32,000 men, with 150 pieces of ordnance, nearly half being of the largest calibre.

The reinforcements having joined the camp on the 21st December, on the 24th orders were issued to the various corps to take up their position in front of the city, which operation was completed on the evening of Christmas-day, the Bengal troops being placed a little in the rear of the spot they had before occupied; those of Bombay, in the position previously held by the allied forces. The two were placed in line on the 26th. Edwardes's troops moved some way backwards, to form a depôt, and ultimately took up the ground which had been occupied by Shere Singh and his men before their defection. Our movements were vigilantly watched by the enemy, and from the clouds of dust which arose, they were supposed to be moving a force in the vicinity of their outworks.

The commander of the forces, having consulted Major Scott, of the Bombay Engineers, as to the best mode of attack, was advised by that officer to operate at once in regular form against the north-east angle of the citadel; but Colonel Cheape, of the Bengal Engineers, recommended first clearing the suburbs, and gaining possession of the town, and General Whish adopted his views.

Accordingly, on the 27th December, four columns of attack were formed, two of Bengal and two of Bombay troops. The Bengal division consisted of portions of H.M.'s 10th Foot, and 52nd N.I., under Colonel Franks, of H.M.'s 10th, and three companies H.M.'s 32nd Foot, six of the 72nd N.I., four guns of Anderson's horse artillery, and two 18-pounder howitzers of the foot artillery, under Colonel Nash, 72nd N.I. The Bombay division was composed of 500 of the 1st Bombay Europeans (Fusiliers), four of the 4th Rifles, Turnbull's battery of 9-pounders, and two squadrons of horse, under Brigadier Dundas; and 500 of the 60th Rifles, 500 of the 3rd Bombay N.I., Bailey's 9-pounder battery, and two squadrons of horse, under Brigadier Capon. A wing of the 8th Bengal N.I. and three companies of H.M.'s 10th Foot, formed a reserve; another wing of the 8th, with the 49th and 51st regiments N.I., were left to protect the camp.

The column of Colonel Franks was directed to move to the right, towards a brick-kiln facing the eastern angle of the fort; that of Colonel Nash, to march direct on the Ava Mundee (mound), facing the Khoonee bastion; the right Bombay column was ordered to advance generally in the same direction, and the other to move parallel to the former on the suburbs nearly south-west of the town.

The columns moved out at one P. M. The attack was opened by Major Edwardes and his levies upon the bridge at Sheesh Mahal, with a view of distracting the enemy's attention. The first column of Bengal troops occupied the brick-kiln, after but little resistance. The second Bengal column pushed on through the suburbs to the mound, and encountered a fire from trenches and buildings in their front, the fort guns at the same time playing on them, when the approach of the right Bombay column (which had met with some resistance, and the fusiliers had engaged hand to hand with the Sikhs), threatening the flank of the enemy, induced them to retreat, or rather fly, the grape from our artillery to their speed adding wings. The Ava Mundee was occupied by the Bombay troops, and some light guns placed upon the summit opened upon the town. The whole of the attacking columns then advanced, under a heavy cannonade, driving parties of the enemy employed upon trenches, sweeping mounds, on which batteries had been newly erected, but without guns, as far as the mausoleum of the late Dewan, Sawun Mull, a post which might easily have been maintained against a large force, but, being left unprotected, it was occupied by our troops. The Blue Mosque (full of fuqueers and women) was next taken, and the troops, driving in the enemy on all sides, reached almost the edge of the glacis. The men of Colonel Franks's division, indeed, are said to have pushed on further than was intended, and consequently suffered from the fire of the fort.

Whilst the British troops were engaged to the southwest, south, north-east, and east, of the town and fort, the allies, under Edwardes and Lake, moving into position on the west and north-west, opened a fire on the walls.

As evening closed in, our troops had secured a most advantageous position within the suburbs, which was held by the riflemen, and only 250 yards from the fort. Trenches were immediately commenced; the guns were brought up and placed in battery, and on the 28th a terrific cannonade and hombardment commenced (the vertical fire being described as tremendous) from four positions; a battery within 400 yards of the fort walls; another on the Ava Mundec mound; a third close to the Delhi gate, where Captain King, of H.M.'s 32nd, with his company, had established himself; and a fourth on the extreme left, 100 yards from a large bastion of the city wall. During the night of the 28th we commenced shelling the city and fort from the mound and extreme right battery, a shell being fired every ten minutes. On the 29th all the mortars were got up; the heavy guns were in position, and opened upon the Delhi gate, and next morning they were breaching within eighty yards of the wall.

The enemy was not, in the meanwhile, idle. On the 27th he had succeeded in driving our troops from the Blue Mosque, which they, however, reoccupied, and protected by remeches and a chain of posts; on the 28th the Dewan opened a furious fire upon our batteries, frequently firing grape made of stone or baked mud, and occasionally discharging red-hot balls, whilst large composition-shells exploded over the heads of our troops. He, however, did little mischief in return for the damage sustained by the practice of our artillery, which is said to have been splendid. Gun-cotton was used by the Bombay portion of the besieging force with much efficiency.

On the 29th the fire from the fort slackened; the city was repeatedly seen burning, and information was received from deserters that awful havock had been made by our shells and shot; that a granary in the fort had taken fire, and some small magazines had exploded. Our batteries continued to play during the night, and early in the morning, as before stated, our great guns opened.

A plan, combining the suggestions of Colonel Cheape and Major Scott, appears to have been adopted, according to which, the town was attacked and its walls breached, but without any view to its being stormed, merely to divert the enemy's attention until a heavy battery could be etablished under the walls of the fort, before he could move his artillery.

The defence of the besieged was most obstinately and gallantly maintained until the forenoon of the 30th, when a terrific explosion took place of their principal magazine, containing nearly a million pounds of powder. The artillery-man who levelled the mortar that occasioned the explosion was rewarded by General Whish on the spot. The shock was like that of an earthquake; a large column of dust and smoke rose to the height of a thousand feet, scattering fragments of rubbish and trees, carcasses, &c. on all sides. Whilst the fort was obscured, the firing on our side ceased, but was resumed, and was incessant during the 30th and 31st, when it was evident that great devastation had been caused by our shot, shells, and rockets, as broken masses of masonry and heaps of brickwork could be seen by the telescope, whilst the principal walls appeared riddled by our 24-pound shot. Numbers of fugitives effected their escape from the city, but were taken by Bhawul Khan's horsemen.

Although the walls were in a tottering condition, no practicable breach had yet been made. A small one was visible at the Delhi gate, on the north-east side of the city, and arrangements were made for an attack upon this point, which was, however, countermanded. Another breach was reported at the Bohur gate.

The guns of the fort, although their fire occasionally stackened, continued to be worked with wonderful activity and perseverance, but with little injury to the besiegers. On the 31st the Mooltanis made a sortie, of 1,000 men, by the south-west gate, upon the allies under Edwardes; but they were driven back with great slaughter by a detachment led by Sir Henry Lawrence (who had joined the camp on the 28th), and Mr. McMahon, a volunteer. About noon, a tremendous fire was observed to break out in the fort, which the garrison was unable to extinguish, and which raged all day and night, and continued to blaze fiercely on the morning of New Year's-day. It proved to be the principal store of the enemy, containing 50,0001. worth of grain and other articles.

In aptte of these disasters and of the murderous fire of the besiegers, the garrison evinced no symptoms of failure of resolution, appearing determined to die at their posts. Nevertheless, the cavalry and horse artillery were sent out to scour the environs, and intercept any fugitives.

Throughout the whole of the 1st of January fearful selvos were made from our beavy betteries, and the most experienced officers are reported to have confessed that nothing could surpass the practice of both armies; shells were thrown from our batteries during the night in threes and fours at a time, and the spectacle is described as grand

On the 2nd, the long-expected orders were issued for the attack. Early in the morning, the Bengal column, consisting of H.M.'s 32nd, and the 49th and 72nd N.I., advanced on the breach near the Delhi gate, the Bombay troops pushing on for a part where the wall had been knocked down on the opposite side. The Bengal column, under Colonel Franks, experienced a determined resistance at the Delhi-gate breach, entrance at which was found impracticable, it being retrenched, with an open drop in front, and defences in the rear; the troops, therefore, moved off to the other side of the town, whither the Bombay troops, under Colonel Stalker, had been directed, and where they had found an entrance. It appears that, for a time, they were likewise stubbornly resisted, but at length they forced their way at the bayonet's point, the Fusiliers, or Bombay "Toughs," first planting their colours within the city, by the hand of their sergeant-major. No officer was killed upon this occasion, but several were wounded; some of them severely.

Towards dusk, large bodies of fugitives were seen moving across the plain, in the direction of Sirdarpore; Wheeler's cavalry scoured the country, but it was so intersected by cuts and water-courses, that it was difficult to act. Many prisoners were taken, and a Frenchman, who had been in the Dewan's service, gave himself up.

The Dowlut gate, which led from the town across the ditch of the fort, with a part of the city, still remained in the hands of the enemy; and during the night of the 2nd a mine was sprung, from which the Bombay troops suffered severely. Next morning the cannonade was resumed against the fort, and, at the suggestion of Lieut. Maunsell, of the engineers, Colonel Young, with three companies of H.M.'s 10th, made a successful dash at the Dowlut gate, which is said to have been a very gallant exploit. Powder-bags were applied, and the men scrambled over by means of ropes, and charged the enemy helter-skelter in the narrow streets and lanes. A good view of the ditch was here obtained; it is about twenty-four feet deep, but was completely commanded by the guns of the fort, which could be depressed.

The town being securely in our possession, the spoil was collected; all pillage was strictly prohibited. The sowcars (native bankers) offered a large sum for the protection of their property.

This important success, gained in the short space of a week, has been, moreover, purchased by a very small sacrifice on our part; whereas that of the enemy, through the fire and explosions, has been tremendous; the streets were literally choked with the killed. The following is the list of casualties :-

On the 27th of December, Killed :- Major J. Gordon, 60th Rifles; Lieut, E. Younghusband, 9th Bombay N.I.; Ensign Gillon, 72ad N.I. Wounded:—Lieut. col. Nash, c.s. 72ad N.I.; Major Case, 32ad Foot, severely; Lieut, H. A. Playfair (since dead), 52ad N.I.; Lieut. Hill, Bombay Engineers, severely; Capt. Bailey, Bombay Art. arm lost; Lieut. Baugh, 9th Bombay N.I.; Lieut. N. W.

Dyett, 3rd Bombay N.I. slightly; Surg. J. P. Malcolmson, 3rd Bombay N.I. slightly; 2nd Lieut. G. Napier, 3rd comp. 1st batt. Bombay Art. slightly; Lieuts. Brooke and Straubenzee, 32nd Foot, severely; Lieut. Tyrwhitt, 51st N.I.; Lieut. Armstrong, and Ens. M*Dougal, 72nd N.I. severely. On the 2nd of January, Wounded:—Capt. T. Tapp, gen. staff, severely; Major M. G. Dennis, 60th Rifles; Capt. R. W. D. Leith, 1st Fusiliers, severely; Lieuts. E. Dansey, W. Gray (severely), E. A. Law (severely), and W. M. Mules, of the same reg.; Ens. Shaw, 3rd Bombay N.I.; Lieut. T. S. Warden, 4th Bombay Rifles, severely; Ens. Gordon, 19th Bombay N.I.; Lieut. Garforth, Bengal Engs. severely; and Lieut. Taylor, H.M.'s 32nd Foot.

The number of rank and file killed and wounded is, comparatively, very small.

The fort, though awfully battered, held out at the date of the last advices, the 6th January; but the garrison had been reduced to below 2,000 men, and desertions were going on every hour. Several the Sikh sirdars had been killed, and Moolraj was represented by the deserters as sitting within the citadel "forlorn." A surrender was hourly expected. It is even said that Moolraj had offered to treat, but General Whish required an unconditional surrender.

The movement of Narain Singh (referred to in our Summary of January 22nd), supposed to have been directed upon Jhung, turns out to have been owing to secession from the cause of the Dewan. He took the direction of Shere Singh's camp, and the Commander-in-Chief, hearing of his upward march, sent a detachment under Brigadier White to intercept him, which could not meet with him.

The state of affairs in the Chenut Doab remains as before, the grand army under Lord Gough (who had joined Sir J. Thackwell's camp) having maintained a perfect inactivity from the 6th December until the 5th January, the latest date of advices. The main army formed one camp, disposed in parallel lines, Lord Gough in the rear, about a march from the position of the Sikhs under Shere Singh, who had made only a slight change in his position, which was strongly intrenched on the left bank of the Jelum, with an impenetrable jungle in his front. His force consisted of 30,000 men of all descriptions, with 30 or 40 guns.

Chuttur Singh, with about 5,000 men, still hovered between Attok (which still held out) and Peshawur. Singh had sent ambassadors to Lahore, who had been most graciously received.

The Juliundur Doab and the rest of the Punjab were tranquil.

Dost Mahomed Khan is said to be in possession of Peshawur, and Chuttur Singh is reported to be in communication with him; but these statements rest upon no authentic foundation.

Just previous to the despatch of the Mail from Bombay, accounts were received there that a body of 12,000 Affghans, with seventeen guns, under Dost Mahomed Khan's nephew, were on their march through the Kojuk and Bolan passes, towards Shikarpore, to invade Scinde. An extraordinary Council sat on the 19th January to consider the matter, but it was determined that there was nothing to apprehend, though more troops were to be sent into the province.

From the other presidencies of India, there is literally nothing of any moment to notice. The Governor-General had established his camp at the well-known Sobraon.

BENGAL.

The intelligence from Mooltan contained in our last extended to the 13th Dec., at which date a portion of the detachment under Major Hallett, consisting of the 3rd Native Infantry, and Turnbull's battery, had gone down to the banks of the Ravee to escort the Bombay siege guns into camp. The train, consisting of thirty pieces of ordnance of the largest size, had been sent from Sukkur up the river in boats, and landed within seven miles of General Whish's camp. A part of the column under Colonel Dundas had crossed the Sutlej fifty miles from Mooltan on the 15th; the rest followed without delay, and the whole joined head-quarters on the 21st. The Bengal troops were not slow in examining the condition and appointments of their newlyarrived companions in arms, nor stinted in their acknowledgments of the admiration excited by them. On Christmas morning the right brigade of the Bengal cavalry and horse artillery moved to their new position at Seetul-ke-Marce, the remainder of the column following a few hours afterwards. The new camp was fully occupied by sunset; the sappers and park in the centre, the infantry on either side, the cavalry and horse artillery centre, the infantry on either side, the cavalry and horse artillery on the extreme right. The order taken by the Bombay was similar to that of the Bengal column, the cavalry covering their left. The two were placed in line on the 26th. Edwardes's troops moved some way backwards to form a depot. They ultimately took up the ground formerly occupied by Shere Singh and his men just before their departure. The enemy were seen to watch our movements carefully, and from the clouds of dust observed to the moving in force in the vicinity rise, they were supposed to be moving in force in the vicinity of their outworks. The Bengal troops took up nearly the same of their outworks. line of ground as they had occupied on the occasion of the former attack: the Bombay column held the position formerly maintained by Edwardes, Lake and Cortlandt. On the morning of the 27th, orders were issued for the formation of four columns of attack. The whole were under arms by 11 A.M., and moved out about 1 P.M. A wing of the 8th, with the 49th and 51st, were left to protect the Bengal camp: the other wing of the 8th, and three companies of H.M.'s 10th foot, formed the reserve. The attack was opened by Edwardes and his levies, who attacked the bridge at Sheesh Muhul with a view of distracting the attention of the enemy. The first division, under Col. Young, consisted of a portion of H. M 's 10th and the 52nd native infantry. They moved to the right, making for the brick-kiln facing the eastern angle of the fort : this they captured with but little resistance. Colonel Nash's column (the 2nd) consisted of three companies of H.M.'s 32nd foot, six of the 72nd native infantry, with four horse artillery guns and two 18-pr. howitzers. They moved straight to the attack of the suburbs on the right of the Mundee Ava mound facing the Khoonie bastion of the fort. The 60th rifles having taken the mound, the column pushed on through the suburbs, when Capt. King, of the 32ad, with his company, succeeded in getting within a hundred yards of the Delhi-gate, which post he held. The Bombay column (3rd), immediately under Colonel Dundas, consisted of five companies of the fusiliers and four of the 4th native rifles, with Bailey's battery; while the left division, under Colonel Capon, consisted of five companies of the 60th rifles, five of the 3rd native infantry, with Turnbull's battery.

The whole force pushed on at once. The column under Colonel Young formed line under a building and some huge mounds of earth near the eedgah beyond Ram Teerut, and then advanced steadily under a somewhat heavy cannonade from the fort. Various straggling posts having been forced, they soon reached some large unfinished trenches, the occupants of which took to their heels. They then swept past the mounds on which were some newly-constructed batteries but no guns, and so on to the splendid mausoleum of Dewan Sawun Mull, the late ruler and father of Moolraj. This post, which might easily have been maintained against large odds, had been left undefended, and a party of our troops took possession of it without resistance and were left in charge. The blue mosque was next taken poseswere left in charge. sion of: it was found full of old men, mostly faqueers, and of They were permitted to remain unharmed in the asylum they had chosen. Some armed men who were seen making their escape from the shops and houses adjoining were pursued as far as safety allowed — some of the more impetuous following them to the edge of the glacis. The guns were now brought up and a selection made of the posts which had been taken. A clump of trees was for a time occupied by thirty or forty men only, and the enemy, observing this, made a dash on it, and for a time were successful: they then pushed on and endeavoured to close with our troops, when they were driven off by a bayonet charge, and the garden re-occupied. The Bombay troops experienced but little resistance until they approached some enclosures, where a sharp fire assailed them and some casualties occurred. Some of the fusiliers engaged hand-to-hand with the enemy, and the sword-cuts with which the dead and wounded were ghashed showed how close and severe had been the encounter. They speedily got a battery into play, while the infantry pushed on and captured the enclosures, taking possession of a garden which was well defended. The right meanwhile made their way towards the mound of Mundee Ave, 600 yards from city, which they captured. The whole of the columns were equally successful, and as evening closed in, we had everywhere approached close to the walls of the town. Batteries were now commenced - one on the right within 400 yards of the fort walls, another on the Mundee Ava Mound, a third close to the post occupied by Captain King, of the 32nd, and a fourth on the extreme left about 100 yards from a bastion in the city wall. The following were the casualties up to the evening of the 29th :- killed-Major John Gordon, 60th rifles, Lieut. E. Younghusband, 9th Bombay N.I.; 60th rifles, Lieut. E. Younghusband, 9th Bombay N.I.; wounded—Lieut.-Col. Nash, 72nd N.I.; Major Case, 32nd foot; Lieut. H. A. Playfair (since dead), 52nd N.I.; Lieut. Hill, Bombay engineers; Capt. Baily, Bombay artillery (arm lost); Lieut. Baugh, 9th Bombay N.I.; Lieut. N. W. Dyett, 3rd Bombay N.I., slightly; Surgeon J. P. Malcolmson, 3rd Bombay N.I., slightly; Ensign Napier, 3rd Bombay N.I., alightly; Lieuts. Brooke, 60th rifles, and Straubenzee, 32nd foot; Lieut. Tyrwhitt, 51st N.I.; Lieut. Armstrong, and Ensigns Gillon and Macdougal, 72nd N.I. H. M.'s 10th had three men killed and feve or six wounded. The 52nd N.I. two or three killed and seventeen wounded. The artillery at Ram Teerut had one killed and seven wounded out of twelve men. The 4th rifles had five killed and eighteen missing, of whom thirteen were supposed killed, and the remaining five were known to have been taken prisoners. six killed and twenty wounded. The The fusiliers had The casualties in the 3rd Bombay N.I. are said to have been twenty, in the 9th and 19th N.I. two each. The troops bivouscked in the posts they had taken possession of, and were relieved next morning. The Bengal and Bombay mortar batteries were both at work by dawn. These and a few other batteries continued to play on the town throughout the whole of the 28th: the riflemen held the suburbs everywhere, and the day was chiefly spent in relieving and reposting troops and making arrangements for the attack of next day. Towards evening the vertical fire became tremendous. During the night of the 28th we commenced shelling the city and fort from the mound and extreme right battery, firing a shell every ten minutes. On the 29th, the 18pounders opened on the Delhi Gate, and next morning the heavy guns were actually breaching within eighty yards of the wall. A plan, combining the recommendations of Colonel Cheape and Major Scott, appeared to have been adopted: the town, according to the suggestion of the former, was attacked, and its walls breached, but without any view to its being stormed. The attention of Moolraj was desired to be distracted, and his guns to be turned in this direction, until we should be enabled to establish a heavy battery under the walls of the fort, which would, it was expected, be in full operation before he could move his artil-The injury inflicted on the enemy must have been selery. The injury inflicted on the enemy must have been severe: repeatedly was the town seen to be on fire, and the masses of dust raised by the shells showed how fatal our mortar practice must have proved. Still the defence was most gallantly maintained; the guns of the insurgents were most admirably directed-their fire continued unslackened. After four hours' firing from the whole of the four batteries, a tremendous explosion occured in the fort early in the forenoon, which must have spread devastation on every side; the grand magazine was supposed to have blown up; clouds of dust and smoke rose above a thousand feet into the air, and resembled the discharge of heavy ordnance close by. Sir Henry Lawrence reached camp on the 28th, and the same day visited the different posts round the fort and town, in company with General Whish and Major Edwardes. During the whole of the 30th and 31st the fire continued incessant, the batteries of the Bengal column on the one side answering those of the Bombay troops on the The walls were now tottering everywhere, but still no signs of a breach such as could be attempted with hope of suc-Moolraj's guns slackened their fire for a little from time to time, but continued to be worked with wonderful activity and perseverance. Their fire, however, was not very destructive. On the 31st December the enemy, still undaunted, made a sortie from the city on the allied troops under Edwardes: they were met by a detachment headed by Colonel Sir H. Lawrence, and Mr. McMahon, a volunteer, and driven back with heavy loss. About noon a tremendous conflagration burst out in the fort; it continued to rage all day with unabated fury, and when night set in it lighted up the firmament and landscape around. proved to be the principal store of the besieged-£50,000 of grain were afterwards understood to have been destroyed, while vast quantities of oil and other combustibles added fury to the flames. The besiegers now carried on their murderous work by the light of the blazing citadel; yet the garrison stood all their sufferings and disasters boldly, and showed no symptom of pusilianimity or fear. The cavalry and horse artillery were now sent out to scour the environs, to prevent the egress of the enemy, and intercept the leaders who were reported to be desirous of making their escape. The exertions of the artillery continued uninterrupted throughout the day: the most experienced officers admitted that nothing could surpass in perfection the practice of both armies. Shells were in the course of the night thrown in threes and fours at a time; the spectacle presented was indescribably awful. An attack had been re-solved upon for New Year's Day, but though the breaches were fast widening as the day advanced, none were considered practicable when night set in. An attack was, however, ordered to be made next morning, and a furious cannonade was maintained throughout the night. Early on the morning of the 2nd, accordingly, the Bengal column, consisting of H. M.'s 32nd, and the 49th and 72nd N.I. advanced on the breach near the Delhi Gate, the Bombay troops pushing on for a part where the wall had been knocked down on the opposite side. he former body on approaching experienced a fierce and de-termined resistance, and found the entrance impracticable, a large mass of wall remaining undestroyed. They retraced their steps accordingly, and made their way as speedily as possible to the other side of the town, in hopes of gaining admission; here they found that the Bombay column had been able to enter. They, too, had for a time been stoutly withstood, when they forced their way at the bayonet's point, the Fusiliers first planting their colours within the city. On this occasion the following officers were wounded:—General Staff—Captain T. Tapp severely; 60th Rifles—Major M. G. Dennis; lst Fusiliers—Captain R. W. D. Lieth severely; Lieutenants E. Danliers - Captain R. W. D. Lieth severely; Lieutenants E. Dansey, W. Gray severely, E. A. Law severely, and W. M. Mules; 3rd Bo. N.I.—Ensign Shaw; 4th Bo. Rifles—Lieutenant T. S. Warden, severely; 19th Bo. N.I.—Ensign Gordon; Lieutenant Garforth, Bengal Engineers; and Lieutenant Taylor, H. M. 32nd foot. A single gate, and a part of the city, still remained in the hands of the enemy. During the night a mine was sprung on us, from which the Bombay troops suffered severely. Next morning the cannonade was renewed against the fort. At daybreak on the 3rd, Col. Young, with three companies of H. M. 10th, made a dash at the Dowlut gate: the men scrambled over by the help of ropes, and charged the enemy in the narrow streets and lanes; their success was complete. The total number of fighting men now believed to be in the fort was considerably under two thousand. The spoil from the town and neighbourhood now began to be collected—anything like pillage was strictly prohibited. Some native bankers had offered £30,000 for the protection of their property. Some elephants, and a large number of baggage-cattle, were brought in. A Frenchman who had been in the insurgent service surrendered himself, and various other prisoners were voluntarily placing themselves in our hands. Many fugitives had escaped, the country being so intersected by canals as to prevent pursuit. One body of about a thousand strong had marched off in order, Our news extends to the evening of the 4th: before the steamer leaves we shall most likely hear of the capture of the fort, and be in possession of much more full particulars than those we are now able to give. We mentioned in our issue of the 17th December, that Narain Singh had on the 1st left Mooltan with a force of some two thousand men and two guns, and taken the route to the Salt Range by the river. He was at first supposed to have been desired to move on Jhung to raise supplies and make preparations for the retirement of Moolraj and the garrison, expected to attempt to escape when Moolfaj and the garrison, expected to attempt to escape when they felt themselves pressed. In our last it was stated that Jacob's horse had on the 18th been sent out to prevent their return with stores to Mooltan,—Emaum-ood-deen, who had been sent out to watch his movements, having foiled bim in his purposes. Conjecture on all points proved at fault:

Moolraj and the garrison had determined to fight it out to the last; and Narain Singh and his troops, having no stomach for the fight, which could not but end in the overthrow and destruction of the insurgents, chose to withdraw while retirement was in their power. Emaum-ood-deen was successful in driving the Seikhs from the neighbourhood of Jhung, and compelling them to take the direction of Shere Singh's camp. The commander-in-chief having heard of their upward march, on the 31st December dispatched a detachment to intercept him. It consisted of H. M.'s 9th lancers, the 5th and 8th light cavalry, with two troops of horse artillery (Duncan's and Fordyce's)—the whole commanded by Brigadier White. The force had not been able to learn anything of the object of their search, and returned to camp on the evening of the 4th January. Narain Singh had before made overtures of service to General Whish on terms we did not at the time care to accept of, and he is said to have made proposals to Lord Gough, which are not unlikely to be closed with—the Seikh having most probably determined to be guided by circumstances. He would most likely hear of the fall of Mooltan by the time our troops got near him, and, finding that no better could be done, he may very probably offer to join us as an ally instead of meeting us as an enemy. It must, at the same time, be remembered, that it has of late but rarely happened that conjecture in reference to Seikh purposes has been verified by fact. If Narain Singh is really anxious to join the insurgents in the field, it will be very difficult indeed in such a country for any force of ours, however strong or well commanded, to prevent him, when it is so easy to pass to the right or left of us. Our latest letter from Lord Gough's camp mentions the prevalence of a rumour that he had been seized by Emaum-ood-deen, and was a prisoner in his hands.

" Mooltan, 3rd Jan., 3 p.m. " According to plan and intention, the city of Mooltan was taken by storm yesterday, about half-past 3 o'clock p.m. Our troops, both Europeans and natives, Bengal and Bombay, behaved most gallantly, carrying everything before them at the point of the bayonet, under a most galling fire of musketry and cannon from the Sikhs, who had ensconced themselves in rear of the breaches. Our loss, as far as yet ascertained, is comparatively small,-far less than what it was apprehended it would be; that of the enemy is said to be immense, and the streets are reported to be literally choked with the killed; the greater portion of these must have been destroyed by our shell, shrapnell, &c., that were thrown into the city from the commencement of the attack. All last night not a shot was heard, which appeared to us something very strange, we having become so accustomed to the firing and smell of powder. Early this morning, however, Moolraj began again from the fort, and of course was replied to by our batteries on the right; ever since, firing of all sorts has been incessant. Moolraj is in the fort, which, though awfully battered, still holds out. It was thought it would be escaladed to-day, but appearances denote that no such attempt will be made until some time to-morrow; 1,100 fighting men of all denominations compose the total force which it is conjectured Moolraj has in the fort. None of his guns have, it seems, fallen into our hands, these being all in the fort. Small arms, however, of every description, have been seized. Loot was abundant yesterday,—horses, mules, and other cattle, being the principal sort of plunder. This, however, has been put a stop to by the general, who has directed the imprisonment of any one seen pillaging. I have heard that certain sowcars of the city came in a body to our officers, and offered three lacs of rupees if we would prevent the spoliation of their property. This, of course, would, under any circumstances, be guarded against. Eleven elephants were brought into camp last night from Moolraj's stables; one of them is that which he took from Gen. Whish's camp some time ago. The general rumour in camp is, that, after leaving a portion of the Bombay troops at Moolsan, when it is taken in toto, the remainder will accompany the Bengal column to Lahore, for service in the field, under Lord Gough.

The siege-train will be returned to Sukkur. Elephants have gone to bring it into camp from the battery; the town having been taken, it is no longer required there. I have not yet had time to ascertain what officer led the storming parties; but this I am certain of, that the Europeans led the van,—they were foremost everywhere."

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL (express from Bombay) arrived in Calcutta about five o'clock on the morning of Friday, January 5th, with English news to November 24th; and the Oriental steamer, with the mails, in the course of the day.

MESSES. SHEARMAN, MUILENS, AND Co.—A fifth dividend of five per cent. on proved claims on the above estate is announced.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has declared a dividend of 6 percent.

SIR HERBERT MADDOCK has (the Calcutta Star informs us) engaged his passage by the Bentinck to leave Calcutta in March.

Dr. Thomson.—A letter dated camp, Ramnugger, the 15th December, mentions that Dr. Thomson, late of the 27th N.I., has been taken prisoner by the Seiks, on his way down from Cashmere.

MAULMAIN.—A census of the town of Maulmain shows the population, exclusive of the military, to number 36,898, of whom 400 are Europeans, and an increase of 9,000 has taken place since the last census, taken not two years ago, which is attributed to the want of due care in taking the former census.

THE BANK OF BENGAL, on the 4th of January, declared a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum for the last half year.

THE SHIP GEORGE ARMSTRONG. - Information was received in Calcutta on the 5th January, that the ship George Armstrong, while being towed down the river, had taken fire, and after a few hours was burnt to the water's edge; the origin of the fire is not stated.

CAPTAIN HANNYNGTON. --We perceive from the Hurkaru that a proposal is in course of circulation for a subscription to a piece of plate to be given to Captain Hannygton in acknowledgment of his services and exertions in the cause of the Bengal army. Such an act emanating from the body of the officers may induce the Directors to reconsider their veto, and consent to a measure which must greatly increase the comfort of their servants, while it costs them nothing.

OPIUM SALE .- The following is the result of the opium sale, held on Tuesday, Dec. 26:-

Behar chts. 2,220 average Rs. 812 Proceeds 1,804,075 820 Benares ,, 804 659,525

NEPAL .- There is a report that the Nepalese have a large army on the plains near our frontier, and are collecting supplies as for a campaign. Hence it is feared by some that they intend to take advantage of our being engaged with the Seiks to invade our territories. The probability is, however, that nothing more is meant than to effect a diversion for the benefit of the Sciks by engrossing the attention of a part of our forces.

Various.—There is to be no change made in the original design of the Benares College about to be erected under the direction of Capt. Kittoe. The building will be one of the noblest we have erected in this land, an ornament to the holy city, and confer no small honour on the designer .- An order has been issued for an addition of Rs. 3-8 to the monthly pay of the sepoys belonging to the army of the Punjab while in the field .-Pertab Chund, the hero of the Calcutta plot, is said to be lying in the Russapugla madhouse. - The natives of Calcutta have been made to believe that human sacrifices were offered in the Medical College for the success of our arms in the Punjab. They are so firmly convinced that people are kidnapped for the College, that even the offer of a rupee would not induce a coolie to pass its gates.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

HUSSAR SADDLES AND CLOTH SHAHRAQUES.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Ramnuggur, Dec. 11, 1848 .- Government having sanctioned the introduction of hussar saddles and "cloth shahraques," for the native cavalry, that portion of general orders by the Commander-in Chief, of the 8th of October, 1847, authorizing the undress shahraque of the officers to be made of black lamb-skin is cancelled, it being desirable that the appointments of the officers should be assimilated with those of the

ARMY OF THE PUNJAB.

Head-Quarters, Camp, Ramnuggur, Dec. 15, 1848.-The 3rd brigade of infantry of the army of the Punjab is broken up.

Consequent on this arrangement the following changes will take place in the numbering of the undermentioned brigades :-

The present 4th to be the 3rd.

- 5th to be the 4th. ,,
- 6th to be the 5th. ,,
- 7th to be the 6th.
- 8th to be the 7th.

The 31st and 56th regiments of Native Infanty are transferred, the former to the 3rd brigade, the latter to the 4th brigade. The 52nd Native Infantry is transferred permanently to the 2nd brigade, and the 73rd regt. of Native Infantry is struck off the strength of the army of the Punjab.

Dec. 21.—The 1st company 6th battalion of artillery, now on duty at Lahore, is struck off the strength of the army of the Punjab.

Dec. 22.—The postmaster of the army of the Punjab is, with the sanction of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, granted a staff allowance of Company's rupees (200), two hundred per mensem.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Nov. 24, reached Madras, Jan. 1. The Bombay express, with letters to Dec. 7, arrived on the morning of Friday, Jan. 12.

Waltier.—A letter from Waltier, near Visagapatam, dated the 29th ultimo, says:—"The general and many other officers have engaged a passage in the Wellesley, of which ship we have no tidings yet. The sickness of the troops employed in the jungles still continues, and there are upwards of 140 of the 26th M. N. I. in hospital."

THE STRAITS. - The Crescent has heard that in consequence of the occupation of the island of Labuan, and the sickness prevalent there, it is the intention of the Madras Government to recommend to the Governor-General in Council, that two regiments on the peace establishment shall in future be allotted for the service of the Straits.

NABOB OF THE CARNATIC. - The Athenaum contains the following account of the nabob's affairs :- "We understand that matters have come to such a pass in the court of the nabob of the Carnatic, that all except a very few adherents have set themselves in opposition to his mode of living, and acts of internal management. The musti who has hitherto presided over the Makamuth, a tribunal established for the settlement of civil disputes among the Mahomedan population, has resigned his office and closed the court, weary it is said of going through the useless ceremony of pronouncing decisions, to which the retainers of the nabob were encouraged to refuse obedience. The followers of the Prophet are therefore like the creditors of his highness, without the means of obtaining justice, and we believe that there is but little chance of either being benefitted, by any resolution which he may adopt of his own accord. His highness is but young, but already the scandalous anecdotes of his public life, would fill a dozen dainty chronicles. It is time for the dignity of his royal line, that some steps were taken to bring about his reformation.

BANK OF MADRAS. - A dividend, for the half-year ending December 31, 1818, of five per cent. on the capital of this bank, was announced as payable on the 10th January.

Godavery Anicur.—We understand that Captain Bell and Captain Buckle, both of the Madras engineers, have been ordered to proceed to Rajahmundry, with a view to examine and report upon the state of the works for the formation of the Godavery anicut, which are now carried on under the superintendence of Captain Orr. The Court of Directors appear to take great inferest in the progress of this truly national undertaking, which for magnitude of design, and utility of purpose, is unmarched. at COLONEL St. JOHN GRANT. - An accident, which might have been attended with very serious consequences, occurred the other day to Colonel St. John Grant, at Secunderabad, Thegallant officer, whilst on duty, was thrown from his horse, and fell heavily on his side. The brass scabbard of his sword, which was completely smashed, inflicted a severe contusion on the hip, from which we are glad to say he is fast recovering.

GENERAL DYCE, commanding the northern division, has recently suffered so severely from sickness at Vizugapatam, that he has been compelled to obtain leave of absence to the Neilgherries, for a lengthened period. He had taken his passage to the presidency in the Wollesley, which is hourly expected at:

Madras.

FRENCH SETTLEMENTS.—The new governor of the French-Indian settlements, H. E. Monsieur de Colan; reached Madras, Jan. 1, and landed under a salute of seventeen guns.

THE BLACK PAGODA OF ORISSA. - Part of the celebrated Black Pagoda on the Orissa coast has fallen, and thereby destroyed one of the most valuable landmarks on that coast.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER

MONEY MARKET.

Our money market continues easy, and we have no change to report. The Bank of Madras has declared a dividend of 21 per cent. per share for the half-year ending 31st Dec. 1848.

BOMBAY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL, with dates from London to Dec. 7, reached Bombay by the Feroze Jan. 6.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE COMMERCIAL BANK have declared a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum.

Colaba Barracks.—It has been determined to recommend the removal of the Colaba barracks from the low and sickly site at present occupied by them, to the airy, rocky ridge presently occupied by the officers' bungalows. The barracks are, besides, to be built on props or arches, and the two changes put toge-ther will probably bring about all that is desired.

The MALTA. - On the 16th Jan. the P. and O. S. N. Co.'s steamer Malta made a trial trip round the harbour, when her performances gave the highest satisfaction to all who witnessed them. Her paddle-wheels are 28 feet in diameter, and occasionally gave as high as twenty revolutions a minute—a velocity of about 18 miles an hour, - while the steamer was making way through the water at the rate of nearly 13, or 101 of actual and 21 of tide to be surmounted.

THE 27TH N.I.—A letter of the 7th Jan. from Hydrabad, Scinde, mentions the arrival of the 27th N.I. at that station from Kurrachee: the corps expected to reach Shikarpore by the 25th.

LIEUT.-COLONEL W. WYLLIE, C. B., formerly commanding the 21st N. I., has been appointed deputy adjutant-general, in room of Major Donnelly, returned to Europe on sick certificate. Colonel Wyllie, it may be remembered, was deputy adjutantgeneral with the army of Lord Keane in the first Affghan war, and again under General England in the advance on Candahar. He continued to fill the office in Scinde under Sir C. Napier, and was shot through the arm at Meanee. He returned to England on furlough in May 1845, whence he only arrived by steamer a fortnight since.

THE LATE DR. MOUAT.-It is with much regret that we ob serve a notice of the demise on board the steamer Bentinck on the 21st ultimo, of Dr. Mouat, late surgeon H. M.'s 15th Hussars, whose name has repeatedly of late been before the world in connection with the military persecutions at Banga-Dr. Mouat, it may be remembered, was some time since tried by court-martial, and sentenced to be dismissed, on charges of altering the records of his establishment, and making erasions in or additions to official letters: the alterations with which he was charged were to all appearance exactly of that character which appear in the most carefully kept records, or most accurately copied correspondence, in India, and did not seem pos-sessed of one single badge of criminality. The Commander-in-Chief did not confirm the sentence, or consider it expedient to re-assemble the court-martial, but followed the middle course of granting leave to the prisoner to return to Europe, where the whole matter was to be laid before the Horse-Guards. Dr. Mouat was accordingly on his way home when a large blood-vessel was ruptured, and death followed almost immediately. His friends entertained no doubt of his restoration to the service without a blemish on his character; but his own purpose was, so soon as the imputations cast on him were removed, to retire from the army and commence medical practice in India, -his high talents, great acquirements, and long experience in the East, offering the best grounds of hope for him in his future prospects,—Bombay Times, Jan. 13.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT G. E. STEWART, 22ND N.I.—The 13th instant, a jury of five officers of the 22nd N.I. was empanelled before the coroner, on view of the remains of Lieut. Stewart, who met his death under the following melancholy circumstances. The deceased and Lieut. Briggs, of the same regiment, left the quarters of another officer at the Boree bunder, on horseback, some time between six and seven o'clock on Friday evening, in order to return to their tents near the Sanatarium. It was dusk, and they proceeded at a rapid canter or gallop. On approaching the Esplanade road, Lieut. Briggs, observing a carriage at the distance of some thirty yards from them, endeavoured to cross the road behind the vehicle, and advised the deceased to hold in his horse and follow his example. Whether or not he heard this caution is uncertain, but he continued to go forward without slackening his pace, and, in attempting to pass before the horses' heads, he came into violent collision either with the pole of the vehicle or the animals. The saddle was torn away from the girths, and both the horse and its rider were thrown to the ground with considerable force. The driver of the carriages, a native, and also a servant, who sat on the coach-box beside him, called loudly to the deceased on perceiving the danger, and stopped his horses as soon as possible, but unfortunately not in time to prevent the sad catastrophe. The deceased stood up directly, and placing his hands upon his abdomen, called to Lieut. Briggs, who had advanced some paces, but returned immediately. Mr. Danvers, magistrate of police, whose carriage it was, also alighted immediately, and he and Lieut. Briggs assisted the deceased to walk towards his tent; but after going a short distance, he complained that he felt faint, and they carried him home. Medical aid was obtained; but the injuries he had sustained were so extensive that it was of no avail, and he lingered in great agony for the space of about two hours, when he expired, having retained his senses until within a few minutes of that On the lower part of the left side of the abdomen, the cuticle was much blackened, as if from a blow; its cavity was filled with a large quantity of dark-coloured blood; the descending aorta, or large blood-vessel of the heart, just as it passed through the midriff, was ruptured, as was also the lower portion of the small intestines in at least three places, any one of which injuries was sufficient to account for death. The carriage-horses were proceeding at a moderate trot, on the ordinary side of the road, in the direction of the native town. Deceased's horse has been properly broken in, and is perfectly free from vice. No one seems to blame but the deceased himself, who lost his life in imprudently endeavouring to cross the road in front of the carriage. Verdict,—"We are of opinion that the deceased met with his death by accidentally coming in contact with the carriage of Mr. Danvers; and we strongly recommend that, for the prevention of further accidents of this kind, lamp-posts be erected at stated intervals along the Esplanade road.

Various.—The Poonah Chronicle states, that the officebearers of the Military Fund have refused to admit Lieut. Randall as a subscriber to the Fund, because "he was not a commissioned officer at the time of his entering the service;" in other words, because he rose from the ranks by good conduct.-The process of macadamising the roads has already been commenced in Sattara, under the auspices of Mr. H. Frere. - The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette gives an account of the sufferings endured by the Parsees in Persia, against whom a regular persecution has been commenced, and who are flying in numbers to Bombay. - The Bombay Telegraph gives an amusing instance of the mistakes which Europeans, even of the first ability, are liable to make in their estimate of native talent. Mr. Hutt, one of the civil judges, reported a moonsiff, named Callydass, as inefficient, and directed that he should undergo an examination to ascertain his qualifications. The man was advised to go in for the examination of a sudder ameenship, and came off with honours, and now stands at the top of the list of sudder ameens.

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, JAN. 17, 1849 .-Our market for imports, owing to the absence of additional supplies of Manchester fabrics since our last, continues unprecedentedly been on a limited scale. An exception to this exists as far as Scotch fabrics are concerned: two vessels from the Clyde have come in fabrics are concerned: two vessels from the Ciyde have come in since the date of our last, and some large parcels, including Grey fabrics, have been disposed of. It will be seen, too, that further sales of goods to arrive have been made, but within the last few days dealers have shewn less inclination to anticipate arrivals, being desirous to receive those goods already contracted for. Our Money Market continues easy.

CEYLON.

The following is a translation from the Singhalese of the address read before the Supreme Court by the leader of the late revolt, and interpreted, sentence by sentence, for the information

"I, Gongalagoda Banda, prostrating myself before this high tribunal, and making my obeisance one million times, most humbly beg leave to submit to the judge who presides over the administration of justice in the Supreme Court the following circumstances, viz. In consequence of some disagreement at our house at Gongalagode in Udonuera, I was induced to go and live with the late sister of my father-in-law, who lives at Cadoewala in Matella; and whilst living there, persons who were in office acquainted the poor people that Mr. Buller had established thirty-two taxes, on which account the people of the four provinces formed themselves into a rebellion. At this time I was living at Matella, and it is true, that one Dingeralle, of Hungoranketta, and the people of Matella, collected themselves together, having imposed upon me by false and fraudulent stories, misled me, and went with me to Dambool, where the following persons, namely —[here follows a list of names]—presented to Leonadora Aratchille three cloths, one jacket, and a silk cloth to be used as a turban, and requested him to dress me with the same; which being done, they then procured a palankeen, and nominated me as their head, notwithstanding my refusal, and conducted me from Dambool to the estate of Wariapola. The people attempted or wanted to set fire to the Tappal stations between Dambool and Gongawalle, destroy the people therein living, and to plunder, but I did not allow them to commit those wrongful acts; but these people came foremost to Gongawalle and plundered the property there. I hastened after them, and directing them not to plunder property, flogged them with five rattans until they were smashed to pieces; but seeing that they could not thereby be prevented, I cut two men in their hands with a sword, which put a stop to it. They likewise wanted to destroy the houses, the court houses, the cutcherry, and the people, but I allowed them no opportunity for carrying those intentions into effect. I was requested by them to come to Kandy, but I refused, saying, 'you acted according to your own will without listening to what I said, that no injury should be done to any one.' Saying so, I went to the estate of Wariapola. A gentleman was then brought there by them, whom they wanted to kill, but I saved him, and did not permit him to be killed. Having come to know, that, in consequence of my having prevented them from committing all those aggressions, and chastised the people of their own party, and thereby prevented the plunder, that they intended to take away my own life, and conspired together to constitute some one else as their head, I deserted them. This is all the offence or wrong I have committed. Both your Lordship's soul and my own were created by one God: your Lordship is a supreme being over this island: your Lordship's soul and mine will have to communicate with each other before God. I therefore implore, in the name of the God who created your Lordship, in the name of his doctrines, in the name of her Majesty, in the name of her crown, in the name of all the churches established in different countries subject to British dominion, in the name of the priests who officiate therein, in the name of his Excellency the Governor of Colombo, in the name of your Lordship's royal father and royal mother, and in your Lordship's own name, that I may be pardoned the said offence or wrong, and that I may be discharged for the sake of charity. Besides this, having got money from my father-in-law, Gongalagodde Manik-ralle, I bought buffaloes for him; these buffaloes, together with his household property, were taken by Government, and his house set on fire. I pray that the same may be restored to him." (Signed) GONGALAGODA BANDA.

SANSERIT LITERATURE, as a whole, may justly be called a splendid monument of human folly, rather than of human wisdom; yet the study of it must always be considered as important by all who wish to become thoroughly acquainted with the languages, opinions, habits, character and religion of the hundred millions who inhabit India. - Cal. # LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Who would expect, a priori, that anything in the shape of literature should exist amongst the Dyaks of Borneo? Yet so it is: savages though they be, they are not insensible to the charms of an art which, we are told, softens manners and extinguishes ferocity. Moreover, instead of chronicles of blood, tales of deep revenge, or culinary treatises upon the most piquant modes of cooking human flesh, their literature, judging from the only specimen we have seen of it, is of a tender and romantic character. In the last number of the Journal of the Indian Archipelago is a Dyak love-story, entitled "The Virgin Daughter of Sultan Bongsu," which in its outline claims kindred with many European tales of the heart."

The atory is given in the original language, which appears to possess all the musical softness of the Malay, the Italian of the East. The translation supplies us with the following simple outline:—

Sultan Bongsu had a beautiful daughter, for whom he was desirous of procuring a husband. A certain nakhoda (master of a ship), hearing of this, presented himself as a suitor, and, like an Eastern wooer, proposed, not to the princess, but to the sultan, her father, offering him 400 dollars for his daughter's hand. The affections of princess Bandang Ayer, however, had been already pledged to a Dyak youth, named Si Miskin, whom she had long loved, and when her father communicated to her the offer made by the nakhoda, she parried it by pretending that, although she was desirous of a husband, and was ready to obey her parent, she had made a vow to marry only the man who should obtain for her a bird that could read, without which she could never be happy. This resolution, which does not seem to have been deemed whimsical, was publicly announced by the sultan, upon which Si Miskin, who believed his mistress sincere, and the nakhoda, with the zeal of true lovers, set about the arduous task of finding that rariesima avis, a literary bird.

It so happened that the rivals embarked in the same ship to explore the uninhabited islands and wild mountains in the vicinity, the depositaries of many natural wonders. Success crowned the efforts of the worthiest and most favoured lover. Si Miskin found a bird who could read off-hand any dialect of Malay,—which, by the way, is written in the Arabic character,—to the great mortification of the nakhoda, who, however, kept his chagrin to himself, resolving to take the first opportunity of putting his rival out of the way, and making the bird his own.

On their return home together, the nakhoda, one hot day, proposed to the unsuspecting and rather incautious Si Miskin, that they should have a bathe. They accordingly took a few plunges, diving and ducking together in a friendly and frolicksome manner, till the wicked nakhoda seized the moment when his rival's head popped up, to give it a mortal chop with a tombak. Making prize of the bird,-fortunately for him not a talking as well as a reading one,—he came to the court of Sultan Bongsu, exhibited the fledged philosopher, and claimed the hand of the princess. She, alas! smitten with grief and sorrow for "her loved and lost one," refused to eat, nay to bathe. She could obtain no relaxation of the hard terms which she had herself proposed, and no delay could she extort from her stern father and her cruel suitor beyond this, - that some coco-nut trees were planted, and when they produced ripe fruits, the princess's pledge was to be redeemed.

Now there lived near the court a certain Nek Kayaban, a vendor of excellent sirih and its accompaniments,—so good, indeed, that the sultan was in the habit of sending to his shop for his daily supply. One day, before the young coco-nut trees had exhibited their fatal fruit, Si Miskin presented himself before the astonished Nek Kayaban. How he was thus able to reappear in the nick of time; whether he had actually died and returned to life, or the salt water had healed his wounded scalp the story saith not. Why should the inventor incumber himself with superfluous embarrassments? It suffices that there he was, alive and well, and being seen by a slave belonging to Bandang Ayer, he whispered in her ear the grateful intelligence. The princess at first dared not credit the tale; she ordered the slave to go back and "look well," that he might be sure it was really her lover, and, when convinced of his existence, her joy, though still secret, knew no bounds.

Meanwhile, the fruit had appeared and ripened on the coconut trees, and the exulting nakhoda made vast preparations for the wedding entertainment, little foreboding what was in store for him. At the critical moment, Si Miskin avowed himself, and disclosed his rival's villany; the knowing bird renounced the nakhoda, and attached itself to its real master; and Rajah Tunggal, the brother of the princess, had a talk with the nakhoda, which "changed his heart into lead." Bandang Ayer was permitted to marry the man of her heart; and the vile nakhoda, exclaiming, in despair, "What can I do?"—did the most prudent thing he could do,—"balayar nan nik maya," set sail in his prahu, and went home.

The law of inheritance amongst the mountaineers of the country of Bima, in the island of Sambawa, according to M. H. Zollinger, is at once curious and simple. All the survivors, sons and daughters, father and mother, brothers and sisters, inherit equal shares. But what is peculiar to this law of distribution is, that the deceased himself inherits from himself; that is, he takes a share, which is divided into three parts: whatever is combustible is burnt; all that cannot be burnt, such as arms and ornaments, is buried with the deceased; whatever is left by him that has life is killed and eaten at the funeral entertainment.

At the meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, on the 6th December, an elaborate Memoir (the seventeenth from the same pen) on the Law of Storms, by Mr. Piddington, was announced. The principal fact verbally stated by the author to be fixed in the Memoir is, the recurvation of storms to the eastward in the China Sea, after they have proceeded to a certain distance: thus establishing a parallel with the storms in the West Indies, which have long been determined to do precisely the same thing.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Geographical Society, on a proposition (which was adopted) that the Society cause to be printed a short manual of instructions for observers, such as may assist young geographers in their earlier researches; it was observed that, at present, the barometer was presumed to stand constantly at 30 inches on the seashore, and on this assumption observations were computed; whereas this was not only wide of the fact, for the mean of the whole year, but each particular month had its own range and mean pressure, and each hour of the day had its peculiar pressure. An observation made in the afternoon at the minimum of depression, under the impression that the harometer stood as it did in the forenoon, would be at least 150 feet out. So uniform were these variations, however, that, on placing the curves for 1843 and 1844 on the same diagram, they very nearly coincided; and had the storms and other irregularities been struck out, they would most likely have done so altogether. So close were the coincidences at all times, that it seemed unlikely the publication of the observations in extense would be required, and that they would confine their attention to the irregularities and anomalies. tables of pressure for one year might thus, therefore, unless in cases of actual tempest, be referred to any other year with a very close approximation to correctness.

The Quarterly Review, in an article on "Music," has the following very striking observations: "The connection between sound and numbers is a fact which at once invests music with the highest dignity. It is like adding to the superstructure of a delicate flower the roots of an oak of the forest. Far from being a frivolous art, meant only for the pastime of the senses in hours of idleness, it would seem to be of that importance to mankind, that we are expressly furnished with a double means of testing its truth. The simple instinct of a correct ear, and the closest calculations of a mathematical head, give the same verdict. Science proves what the ear detects—the ear ratifies what science asserts—instinct and demonstration coalesce as they do with no other art; for, though the same species of identity exists between the rules of perspective and the intuition of a correct eye, yet the acisnee in this instance is neither so profound nor the instinct so acute. The mere fact that music and mathematics should be allied, is a kind of phenomenon. One can hardly believe how Euclid and Jenny Lind should have any common bond of union; but deep in the secret caverns of the mind the materials from which both are supplied mingle in one common source, and the paths which have conducted a Galileo, a Kepler, and a Herschel to the profoundest abstractions the luman mind is capable of, have started from the sweet portals of musical sound."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

FRIDAY, February 23, 1849.

THE importance of the contest in which the British arms are engaged in the Punjab seems to be recognized by the conspicuous place which the subject occupies in a distinct paragraph of the Royal Speech at the opening of the session of Parliament. From the terms employed in the paragraph, some clue may, perhaps, be gained to the views entertained by her Majesty's Government respecting the nature of the contest; whilst the remarks which it drew from members of the Legislature may indicate the sentiments of those from whose conclusions the stream of public opinion upon political questions commonly derives its source.

The paragraph is evidently framed with care and circumspection. The war is described as "a rebellion of a formidable character," which has compelled the Governor-General to assemble a considerable force, "for the preservation of the public peace," which force is now engaged in military operations against "the insurgents;" and it is added, that the tranquillity of British India has not been affected by those "unprovoked disturbances." It follows from this description, that the Government of British India is not at war with the Maharaja of Lahore, with the Council of Regency, or with the people of the Punjab; that it is a "rebellion,"—that is, a resistance to the legitimate authority of the state,—which the British troops are employed in putting down, not a national opposition to the power which has thrown a shield of protection over the young sovereign of the Sikhs; that the resisting parties are not the authorities of the country, or the population, but "insurgents," and that the force, considerable as it is, which is engaged in military operations against them, has been assembled, not because the tranquillity of British India has been affected by these "disturbances," but for "the preservation of the peace of the country," which all the native states of India have an interest in maintaining, although policy, as well as convenience, and even justice, has devolved that function upon the British Government, as the paramount or greatest power in India.

If this construction of the Royal Speech be correct, it confirms and justifies the view we have taken of the subject, and, as it appears to us, places the advocates of wholesale "annexation" in a dilemma. If a rebellion, or disturbance, in a native state adjoining the British territories, the ruler of which state has been taken under British protection during his minority, is sufficient to justify the annexation of that state to our territories, a far more compendicus and direct course of proceeding, and one quite as equitable, would be to issue at once a declaration, that independent native authority had ceased to exist in India, and that all the countries comprised in that very comprehensive name,—from the Indus to the Ganges, and from the peaks of the snowy chains to the extreme Comorin,—had become integral parts of the British empire.

That such an assumption of supreme dominion on our part would inflict little, if any, individual injury; that it would confer extensive and lasting benefit upon every class of the population of that vast country; that it would simplify the machinery, economize the resources, and consolidate and strengthen the powers of the Government, can scarcely admit of dispute. But all just theories of governmental policy are founded upon a code of morals; the Law of Nations, like the constitutions of all separate societies, is based upon the Law of Nature and the Law of Revelation; its rules spring from those principles of natural justice in which all mankind concur; and the question is, how, without a voluntary surrender of its independence by a native state, or such a casus belli, by infraction of public faith on the part of a state, as will authorize the seizure of its territories, their annexation to our dominions can be reconciled with natural justice. We have hitherto met with no justification of such an act beyond very specious arguments, showing that the advantage of both parties, in the opinion of the stronger, would be promoted thereby.

The subject of the war in the Punjab was noticed prominently only in the House of Lords, where Lord Stanley commented on the use of the term "rebellion," to which he excepted, on the ground that it was a term which denoted. "the rising of subjects against their lawful sovereign;" that the Punjab was no part of the British dominions, and that the ministers were not justified in designating by the unimportant and insignificant word "rebellion" that which was, in fact, "a war of a formidable character." The justification of the use of this word, however, may be found in the interpretation we have put upon the paragraph of the speech, and which the objection of Lord Stanley tends to fortify. His Lordship "did not venture to express any opinion whether policy may render it desirable, or necessity make it unavoidable, to annex the Punjab to our territories in India;" but he could not mean that policy alone, or what we might choose to call necessity, would warrant the. measure.

Lord Brougham confined himself chiefly to a notice of the operations in the field, and to Lord Gough's "notification:"—

"He thought her Majesty's ministers had shown a wise discretion in not singing any Io peans upon what had happened in the Panjab, and he could have wished that the general officer in command of our forces there had evinced the same forbearance. When an officer in high command, copying the example of Lord Nelson, began his despatch with, 'It has pleased Almighty God to bless her Majesty's arms with victory,' it should be a success so great that there could be no doubt about it. Undoubtedly, they were told that good Christians would be thankful for small mercies, and that reverses ought even to be received with thankfulness, as chastenings from the Divine hand. Viewed in this light, the general in command of the British forces in the late engagement might perhaps have commenced his despatch in some such words as these: 'It has pleased Almighty God to permit me to be out-manœuvred by the eaemy;' which would have been edifying indeed. He trusted that it would please Divine Providence to enable our forces in India to turn to good account, at any rate, what had been done, so as to lead to the pacification of the Indian peninsula."

The inference we are inclined to deduce from the remarks of the two peers, and from the abstemiousness of other members of both Houses, is, that the subject is an embarrassing one, and, perhaps, it is politic on the part of the opponents of the Government to let things take their course, rather than commit themselves to any specific opinions upon the question.

With reference to the operations in the Punjah, it must not be concealed that there is too much reason to complain of the ill-effects of delay and procrastination. "All our disasters in the Punjah, during the present year, the first excepted," observes the Friend of India,

"Have arisen from unnecessary and most culpable delays. If the Bombay troops had at once marched to the assistance of General Whish, without remaining idle at Roree, while squabbles about presedence were settled, Mooltan would in all probability have long since fallen, and the Bengal troops would have been co-operating with the Commander-in-Chief against Shere Singh. If our troops had been ready to occupy the Rechna Dooab early in October,—that is, after five months of preparation,—if a large and imposing force had been planted only a few miles from Lahore, between the Ravee and the Chenab, it is highly probable that Shere Singh would not have turned against us, and Major Lawrence might still have been able to hold Peshawar. But now, by our procrastinations, which are to be traced mainly to the want of a good understanding among those in power, we have an army of thirty or forty thousand men in the field under Chutter Singh's family, and the campaign begins in the month of December!"

Speculations, as to what might have happened had certain measures been resorted to, are not usually worth much; but the aforegoing are founded upon facts which seem to give them a title to confidence.

It would be as wonderful as a Kentucky fact, if it were not a mere every-day occurrence, how human ingenuity can pervert and perplex the simplest questions; how, like a locomotive steam-engine, it can reverse its operations; how it can evolve a slender filament of truth from a knot of coarse error, and, by a reflex action, complicate it again, almost inextricably, into a tangled web of embarrassment.

The East-Indian railway question, which some parties endeavour to darken and mystify, is simplicity itself. It is agreed on all hands, that the Court of Directors stipulated to pay 51. per cent. upon the capital subscribed by the railway shareholders, for 25 years, on certain conditions, which were accepted; and the question is, whether this 61. per cent. was to be interest or dividend. What matters the name, unless it be intended that, by the use of a particular term, the Court of Directors meant to make, and have made, themselves liable for all losses incurred by a railway company in an undertaking for the shareholders' profit?—a construction of the agreement which nothing but the most direct and unequivocal evidence could establish; which is so much at variance with the ordinary principles of contracte, that a court of equity would hardly enforce such a condition, and which would operate as a premium upon misanagement;—a construction, in short, so preposterous, that proof of its reality would be at the same time evidence that the Court must have lost their senses. In every event, except that of a ruinous loss upon the undertaking,-a result which, as we before remarked, the guarantee in the sense contended for would be calculated to bring about,the interest will be dividend:-if the profite of the railway merely equal the expenses, the terms are identical; the interest would be the dividend; and if the loss proveless than the amount of guaranteed interest, the dividend will be the interest reduced in the proportion of the loss. If the loss is exactly 51. per cent. on the capital, there will be no dividend, but the shareholders even then will suffer no diminution of their capital: it is only in the event of a loss exceeding 51. per cent., which the railway parties assume to be next to impossible, that the shareholders can suffer any damage whatsoever.

But it is said, the Court of Directors have reserved large powers of control over the railway companies, for which they ought to pay. This reservation is a matter of duty on their part, for the sake of the community, and even of the shareholders themselves; and surely it is forgotten by those who talk of "payment" that Parliament reserves a control over English railways, and has been severely blamed for not retaining much larger powers, which are considered inherent rights in the grantors; and who ever suggested that railway companies had on that ground a pecuniary claim upon Parliament? But, in fact, the Court of Directors do engage to pay 5 per cent. upon the capital of the railway for twenty-five years.

In respect to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, Mr. Nicholson, the superintending director, in a remarkably clear and common-sense address to the shareholders, has annihilated every vestige of objection upon this score, as applies to that railway, by showing that, "let the worst come to the worst," supposing the railway made, and there should be no traffic upon it at all, and that the railway company should be, nevertheless, held to their contract, to work two trains a day,-although there should not be a single passenger or an ounce of goods to carry,—the expense of working the trains, of keeping the stock in order, of establishment and office charges, and of maintenance of way, which he takes at 1001. per mile, would occasion a loss not exceeding 11 per cent. upon the capital of the company, and, deducting this from the 5 per cent. guaranteed interest, there would still be an actual dividend to the shareholders of 31 per cent.

Impartial men, of any reflection, must perceive that the supposed "impediments" thrown in the way of railways in India, which interested persons impute to ill-will on the part of the Court of Directors, are entirely imaginary. The Court of Directors and the Government of India have a direct and paramount interest in the success of railways in that country, and it is for this very reason that they are not overeager to countenance merely speculative projects. The President of the Board of Control has distinctly declared that there is no desire on the part of the Indian Government to take the construction and working of railways out of the hands of private individuals, by whom they would be better managed; but, at the same time, he would not give a pledge that, if private enterprise miscarried through being illdirected, the Indian Government would long deny their subjects the benefit of such works from too great a backwardness to undertake them.

At the late Court of Proprietors, it will be seen, Mr. Hume propounded the startling doctrine that the holders of East-India Stock were the real governors of India, "by the tenour of the Act of Parliament." The Chairman and Sir J. W. Hogg were somewhat overcome by the unexpected emanation of such a doctrine from one "who was supposed to be an authority on matters connected with India," and even Mr. Serjeant Geeelee,—who, it appears, like many speakers whose tongues are suffered to get the better of their discretion, cannot recognize his own speeches when in print,—did not wholly subscribe to the dectrine of his

"honourable friend." Mr. Hume, however, seems not to have retracted it, any more than he did the "hard words" he applied to the Chairman, or rather to the Court of Directors, and so the matter at present rests upon a mere dictum. Aware of the difficulty of extracting from Acts of Parliament, which have a language of their own, emancipated from rules of English grammar and construction, their true meaning, we cannot venture to pronounce Mr. Hume in the wrong; but his discovery is quite new, and will, no doubt, give a fillip to the price of East-India Stock.

DEBATE AT THE EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

THE RAJ OF SATTARA.

A Special General Court of Proprietors was held 7th February, at the East-India House, in pursuance of a requisition signed by nine proprietors of East-India Stock, to take into consideration the following resolutions:-

"That, by the treaty concluded between the East-India Company and his late Highness Pertaub Singh, Rajah of Sattara, on the 25th September, 1819, the territories of Sattara were secured to him and to his heirs in perpetual sovereignty. That, by the supplemental treaty of September, 1839, the said territories were confirmed to his brother, Appa Sahib, as the next collateral heir and successor, and to his heirs, on the same terms as specified in the treaty of September, 1839.

"That this Court has heard with feelings of the deepest surprise and salarm of the contemplated seigure, configuration, and approximent by the East-

"That this Court has heard with feelings of the deepest surprise and alarm of the contemplated seizure, confiscation, and annexation, by the East-India Company, of the Sattara territories, in violation of the rights of the lawful heir; believing, as this Court does, that such seizure, confiscation, and annexation, would be a most flagrant breach of the said treaties so solemnly entered into and confirmed, would be a disgrace and stain upon the British character, and would seriously weaken the confidence hitherto reposed by the princes and people of India in the justice and good faith of the East-India Company and of the British Government.

"That, under such circumstances, this Court deems it to be their imperative duty to declare their solemn conviction of the Impolicy and danger, no less than of the injustice, of such a proceeding, and to express their earnest hope that the Court of Directors and the Board of Control will withhold their sanction from such a measure."

Mr. Hume said it would be in the recollection of the Court that, in December, a Special Court was summoned, in order to ascertain whether the report was correct that the East-India Company contemplated, in violation of treaties, the confiscation of the territory of the late Rajah of Sattara, and to deprive the heirs of that family of what appeared to belong to them of right. If he had been present, he should have stopped the discussion after the declaration from the Chairman that the question was under the consideration of the Court of Directors, and that the papers which had been lately received from India were also before them for consideration (hear, hear); his opinion being that any discussion before the necessary documents were obtained If he was corwould not lead to a just and proper conclusion. rectly informed, after Mr. Lewis had made his statement, the Chairman moved that the Court be adjourned, on the ground that the question was before the Directors, who would give to it their best attention, and that, in the absence of the papers (which had lately arrived from India), it would be but fair that the Court should wait for their production. He presumed that these papers contained something new, which might alter in a great measure the opinion he (Mr. Hume) had upon the subject. The Court adjourned accordingly, to give the Directors an opportunity of producing these papers. He was sorry to see an opportunity of producing these papers. He was sorry to see the Chairman shake his head. Had he (Mr. Hume) been present, he should have concurred in the motion for adjournment, in the belief that the Court of Directors had not yet come to any decision as to the course they should adopt. He was fully impressed with the belief that every person present at the last Court honestly expected that what the Chairman proposed to do was to adjourn the Court in order to afford him an opportunity to place the documents before the proprietors, that they might be able to come to a decision themselves upon the subject, before any orders were sent out to India with respect to the territory of Sattara. He was sorry to see from what the Chairman had intimated that such was not his intention, which it now appeared was to gain time. Now, he complained, on behalf of the proprietors, that they had been deceived—that the promise held out, and the pledge given, that the Court was to adjourn in order that the documents from India should be published, had been broken (hear)—that the Directors had not produced these papers, and that they had come to a decision, in conjunction with the Government, to seize the Sattara territory, and orders had been sent out for the appropriation of the whole of the territory of Sattara to the Company, without reference to any provision for the heirs of the deceased rajah. If that was the case, a transaction more discreditable, more dishonourable, more infamous, and one more likely to have a deep effect upon the public mind, had not within his long experience been committed. The charge he thus made against the Directors must be inves tigated. He complained that they had stolen a march upon the proprietors, and he asked what was the fear of having the matter discussed, after the papers should have been produced, in which the honour of the Company and the character of the English nation were involved? (Hear, hear.) During the long period he had been a proprietor, he had repeatedly stated that the success of the East-India Company was not owing more to the power of its arms than to the good faith which it had maintained with native chiefs; but if the Court were about to break agreements entered into in good faith, to set aside treaties solemnly entered into, without the sanction of the proprietors, who by the tenor of the Act of Parliament were themselves governorsconfidence which had been heretofore reposed in them will be irreparablyshaken (Hear.) Under these circumstances, he would not enter into the question whether the young man who had been named successor of the deceased rajah, both by adoption and lineal descent, is entitled to the territory: the question of his right was quite independent of the question whether Pertaub Singh had violated the treaty. The question was, is his family to be punished for any acts of which he may or may not have been guilty? The common heir was not to be implicated in any guilt of which his grand uncle may have been accused. upon that ground that he had great reason to complain of their not having an opportunity of discussing the question before the order was sent to India. He had put a question to the first minister of the Crown to know whether an order had been sent out, with the sanction of her Majesty's Government, to confiscate the property of the Rajah of Sattara, and Lord John Russell replied that that was in fact the case. He (Mr. Hume) meant to move that this Court do now adjourn for fourteen days or three weeks, with a view of having the papers printed and placed in the hands of the proprietors. He had spoken thus strongly because he felt strongly the dishonour—the disgrace-the infamy that attached to every one connected with the East-India Company in consequence of the course which had been adopted. He moved "That this Court do now ad-

The Chairman.- I have no hesitation nor objection, on the part of the Court of Directors, that these papers should be published and circulated among the proprietors. (Hear, hear.) But with regard to the adjournment of the Court for the papers to be discussed, the proposition of the hon, member cannot well be complied with. It will take some time to prepare the papers. When the proprietors have read them, the Court of Directors will be very happy to attend to any requisition that might be presented to them for calling another meeting. But I cannot conclude without bringing to the notice of the Court the very hard terms which the hon. proprietor has used, as to what is reported to have been said by me at the last general Court. Now, I said nothing of the kind which the hon gentleman has im-It would be most unconstitutional in me to make puted to me. the Court of Proprietors the executive. What I are not the Court of Directors and the Government to consider any question before they have ascertained what are the opinions of the proprietors? It is a most unconstitutional doctrine.

Mr. Lewin considered this to be another mode adopted by the Court of Directors to get rid of this discussion.

Mr. Hume said, if he could have the papers sooner by moving for them here than they could be furnished by the House of Commons, he was quite willing to adopt that course; and he therefore moved,-

"That there be laid before this Court copies of any despatch or correspondence, secret or otherwise, from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company to the Governor-General of India in Council, sanctioned by the Commissioners for the Affairs of India, and communicating the decision of the Court on the question of the disposal of the Sattara state, in consequence of the death of the late rajah; together with all correspondence, secret or otherwise, between the Governments of India, from the 14th day of October, 1847, and not already laid before this Court; as also, copies of all minutes recorded by members of Council in India, and dissents, protests, or minutes recorded by any member or members of the Court of Directors on that subject; and that the same be printed for the use of the proprietors."

He had consulted the President of the Board of Control on the subject, and he was of opinion that that was the best form in which to frame his motion.

Mr. Lewis seconded the proposition.

Mr. Clarke thought it due to the Chairman to state that no pledge was given by him to this Court that he would produce any papers; no such inference or deduction could be made from the observations of the Chairman; neither was anything said on the part of the Chairman to lead the Court to expect that the Directors would make the proprietors parties to any decision to which the Court of Directors, in conjunction with the Government, might come upon the question.

The Chairman.—I am very glad that the hon proprietor has made the observation he has, for it prevents the necessity of my making any observation in reply to the hard terms which have been used by the hon. proprietor (Mr. Hume) towards myself and the Court of Directors. I can honestly and truly say, that no pledge was given by the Court of Directors to the proprie-tors. All I said was, that the papers had arrived; that they were sub judice, and that no doubt the Court of Directors would give them every proper consideration. I never had the intention, and it never entered into my mind, to say that the subject, which was under the consideration of the Court of Directors, would be first submitted to the consideration of the proprietors. They are not the executive government. I believe the time is not yet arrived when the Court of Proprietors are to be considered the executive. The hon, member has been correctly informed by the first minister of the Crown that the question of the right to the territory of Sattara has been decided by the Court of Directors, in conjunction with the Commissioners for the Affairs of India. It is not at all out of the question that the Court of Proprietors shall discuss that decision; but what I say is, that the Court of Proprietors would not be in a condition to enter upon that discussion until they have placed in their hands all the papers. The hon, member has moved that those papers be printed and circulated among the proprietors. I have not the slightest objection to that. They shall be printed for the use of the proprietors as soon as it can be done, but I am unwilling that any particular day should be named for the adjournment. because, when the documents have come into the hands of the proprietors, it is possible they may arrive at a different conclusion as to the necessity of there being any discussion at all; but to any requisition which they may then think it proper to make, I shall have no possible objection.

Mr. Lewin was present at the last meeting, and his impression was that, when the Chairman said that the question was sub judice, he did not mean the Court of Proprietors to understand that the Court of Directors were in a condition to decide upon it before it had undergone discussion by the proprietors. The Chairman's speech evidently conveyed that impression, and he understood it exactly in the same sense as the hon. proprietor

Mr. Lewis put it to any person who heard the statement of the Chairman at the last meeting, whether the plain and only intelligible inference to be drawn from that declaration was not that, before an actual decision was come to on the Sattara question, and, à fortiori, before a final despatch was sent out to India confirming the decision, this Court would have an opportunity of very respectfully stating its views and opinions on the matter? (Hear, hear.) True, he did not actually say that the papers should be laid before them, but the only inference to be drawn should be laid before them, but the only inference to be drawn from the tone and manner of the Chairman was, that the papers would be forthcoming, and the Court would have another opportunity of fully and impartially discussing the question before the executive came to a final decision upon it. Mr. Weeding really could not understand what ground of complaint the gentlemen who had been instrumental in calling the Court could urge against the Directors. He thought they had already had the fullest opportunity for discussing and placing their opinions before the Court of Directors, who, no doubt, had given them all the consideration that they were worth. (Hear, hear.) The Court of Directors was the only tribunal to decide the question. The Court of Proprietors The Court of Proprietors might give its opinion upon it, and the hon. gentleman who had just sat down and his friends had already done so; they had entered at large into their views at the last Court, and he was quite surprised that the hon. gentleman who had introduced the question to-day had not well considered the proceedings of the last Court before he ventured to make such sweeping charges against the Court of Directors. (Hear, hear.) He was quite convinced the Directors had considered and duly weighed the arguments adduced, on the last occasion of their meeting, before they came to the resolution to send out the despatch; and he was satisfied that they were undeserving of the vituperation heaped upon them.

Major Oliphant said it appeared to him that there was very little difference of opinion amongst them on the point in dispute; but he could assure the proprietors that the majority of the gentlemen behind the bar would be ready and willing to give their reasons for the course they had pursued when the Court met again. In the mean time he might, perhaps, be allowed to state that there was no difference of opinion in the Court of Directors upon the question.

Sir J. W. Hogg said it was highly desirable that the papers should be laid before the public, and the matter disposed of as speedily as possible. (Hear, hear.) They were all equally anxious to obtain the fullest information on the subject; but he thought no person who had heard the discussion which took place at the sitting of the last Court would fail to regret the strong language made use of by the hon gentleman who had opened the debate. (Hear, hear.) He had made charges against his hon. friend, the Chairman of this Court, in language which he was sure the hon. gentleman would himself regret when he read it over in his cooler moments. The hon. gentleman made use of the words "dishonourable," "disgraceful," and "infamous." Such language as this fell harmless upon his hon. friend the Chairman, and only proved injurious to the person who had used it. But he was more astonished at the doctrine the hon. gentleman had laid down with regard to the constitution of the Court of Directors and the formation of the Company, and he was the more surprised at this doctrine, because it came from the lips of a gentleman who was supposed to be an authority on matters connected with India. They were told that the Court of Proprietors formed the executive government of India. (No, no.) Some gentlemen cried "No, no;" but that was the meaning of what the hon, gentleman said; or if it was not, then what he said was altogether devoid of meaning. When the discussion took place at the last meeting, the Chairman said the question was sub judics. Now, said the hon. proprietor, it was the duty of the Directors, according to the constitutional Government of India, before they decided upon the question-before they communicated their decision to the department who co-operated with them in the affairs of India-to call the proprietors together and consult them upon it. (Hear, hear.) He (Sir J. Hogg) denied that that was the constitutional government of India. Everybody could see plainly the error into which every controlling body would be brought by the doctrine that the executive government ought to consult the proprietary body. If the constitutional government was wrong, alter it; but while it existed, adhere to it. It was at least the duty of their executive government to adhere to it, and there was, therefore, no cause of complaint. It was not competent for the Court of Directors to wait for the decision of the proprietors before they determined any question. If that system was wrong, it was competent for the proprietors to endeavour to change it; but do not let hon. proprietors get up in the manner they had just witnessed, and apply all sorts of ill names to the Chairman and Directors, because they had done their duty in acting according to the constitutional law of the country. (Hear, hear.) When a man used harsh or hard language, it induced him to arrive at one of two conclusions; either the party using such language had a bad temper or a bad cause. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) Now his hon. friend had not a bad temper. He was known in the House of Commons to be of an excellent temperament. He had been tried beyond all men in the House, and had been proved to be the man least open to give offence, and he could not for the life of him help thinking that he must have a bad cause. (Hear, hear.) It often struck him that, whenever the hon. gentleman got up to speak upon this unfortunate Sattara question, he felt a little uneasy, as though he would say, "Alack-a-day, what a miserable hour it was when I took up this unfortunate Sattara question! I am perfectly ashamed of it myself, and of the part I have taken in it." (" Hear," and laughter.)

Mr. Hume said, often as he had occasion to complain of the hon. baronet being in the wrong, he had never known him so far wrong as he was now. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) Though he did not retract one word or one argument he had made use of, he must complain that the hon. baronet had taken his words without the previous remarks. What he said was this, the Court separated, as far as he knew, with the understanding that they were to be informed of the decision of the Court, and to have the papers before them before a final order was sent out to India. An adjournment took place upon that understanding, and it was in that belief that he made use of the words referred to. (Hear, hear.) It was not inconsistent with the constitution to discuss the decision of the Directors. In applying the epithets he had done, he did so, sincerely believing that the conduct of the Directors merited them, while he could assure the hon. baronet that he was mistaken in supposing that he (Mr. Hume) fancied his cause was a bad one. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Serjeant Gaseles was desirous of asking the standing counsel of the Company a question as to the proceedings of the Court at the last meeting. He had been informed by the highest authority in this kingdom, that the proceedings of the last Court were most unconstitutional, most unparalleled, and most illegal. He would ask the learned gentleman whether that was his opinion as a lawyer; and whether, as a lawyer, he considered that they had the power to adjourn a general and a special Court in that most unconstitutional, most illegal, and most unheard-of manner?

A Director.—May I ask whether this question is relevant to the subject-matter of this debate?

The Chairman.—It has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee said, however that might be, he was

of his question, and be prepared to answer it at the next meeting. He felt extreme regret that any harsh language should have been used on this occasion. He must regret that the Chairman was frequently placed in a most unfortunate position, and was almost unavoidably brought into collision with certain parties belonging to the proprietary body. Indeed it was a most extraordinary fact, that in this Court, whenever the words of the Chairman were misinterpreted and misunderstood, they were always misinterpreted and misunderstood against the popular rights of the proprietors, and in favour of the 'close system.' (Laughter.) He was not, however, charging the Chairman with any delinquency, but perhaps in his cooler moments he might think that he had unintentionally made assertions at the last Court, the nature of which, in the hurry of business, might have since escaped his memory. The presumption was, that the Court of Directors meant to summon the proprietors again before they arrived at a conclusion, and hon, members were suffered to go away under that impression, which now turned out to be a delusion. He must say, that it was the duty of the Chairman to have avoided making that false impression. He agreed with the hon. member (Mr. Hume) in looking upon it as a breach of faith on the part of the Directors towards this Court.

The Chairman.-I beg to call the hon gentleman to order. I will read to the Court what was taken down by the short-hand writer, as being what I really did say. I think, if hon members will attend to what I said, they will see that it was impossible that I ever intended that it should be thought by the proprietors that I should submit the question concerning the rajahship of Sattara to their consideration before the executive came to a decision upon it. This is what I said, and the Court will now be able to judge whether the attack which has been made personally upon me by the hon proprietor is just or not. I should be ashamed of myself if I ever said a single word calculated to theceive or mislead any one. The whole conduct of my life will gainsay any such imputation. This is wnat was taken down by the short-hand writer of what I said. [The Chairman read the report of his speech as it is given in the Mail of January 5, p. 20.] Now, if any proprietor has put a construction upon these words to the effect that I told the Court that, before the Court of Directors came to any decision upon the subject, the question would be submitted to them, I can only say that I do not put that construction upon what I have just read myself. It would have been unconstitutional on my part. The Court of It would have been unconstitutional on my part. Proprietors have nothing to do with the decision of the Court of Directors. They may afterwards discuss the subject as much as they please, and either approve or censure the course we have adopted. I must confess I am surprised that the hon, gentleman should tax me with doing that which I most decidedly disclaim having done.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee, resuming, said, the Chairman had read them his speech from the short hand writer's notes. He should be glad to know who it was that paid for those notes; whether the short-hand writer was paid only for reporting the speeches of the Directors, or for reporting everything that occurred. If the latter, he must say that some very garbled reports had been made of his speeches; indeed, in many instances they had been so altered that he did not know them when he saw them again, ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) With regard to the subjectmatter in dispute, he did not impute any improper motives to the Chair, but he did maintain that the Chairman had been placed in an unfortunate position by his language at the last Court having been misunderstood; for, intentional or not, the words addressed from the chair induced a belief that another occasion would be afforded them for discussing the question. As to the Chairman being a man of honour and integrity, who had denied it? He (Mr. Sergeant Gaselee) knew how all the votes were got; he knew how patronage was exercised; and, as to character, he (Mr. Sergeant Gaselee) stood as high as any hon gentleman who ever sat in the chair. He protested against the system, whenever any troublesome question came on, of the Chairman moving an adjournment. He appreciated the value of the entertainments and good dinners given at the East-India House as much as any man,—though he never was invited to them,—but neither good dinners nor any other inducement ought to lead to the shirking of this question of the Rajah of Sattara. The constitution of the Court of Directors was bad, and it should be altered; and he agreed that there were many men at the Board who ought not to sit there, and he would say, with Sir J. Hogg, turn them out. It was true that the Act of Par-lament constituting the Court made their seats annual; but they had a mode of re-electing themselves by influencing their friends, he hardly knew how, but he supposed it was by giving dinners and bestowing patronage. He therefore said, from the bottom of his soul, "turn them out," and if any hon member would join with him he would do so. (Laughter.) Let the Court contrast the demeanour of the Directors when in office with their deportment when, as candidates, they came bowing and scraping to ask the opinions and the suffrages of the proprietors. When those gentlemen got into the Direction, was it to be tolerated that they were to treat the proprietors with contumely? He cautioned the proprietors not to be misled; the Directors were endeavouring to put this matter on a false point; they were misinterpreting Mr. Hume's words, and were endeavouring to make the proprietors believe that they, the proprietors, wanted to take upon them the settlement of this question. But let not the proprietors be misled; the attempt was not to alter the constitution of the Court of Directors, but it was to give them such wholesome advice as it was in their power to give. He thought if the places were given away a little more according to merit. and less according to nepotism, the administration of the Directors would come out of these matters with a great deal more credit, and everybody would not, as now, be laughing at it. believed the Chairman to be a most honourable man. He (Mr. Sergeant Gaselee) believed he had no sinister intention; but it was a little unfortunate that he led the proprietors to believe that, before the matter was settled, they should be called togsther, not to dictate, but to advise on the subject.

An Hon. Proprietor said he was present at the last meeting, and then made a suggestion, after the Chairman's amendment, which the meeting was pleased to approve of, and stated themselves ready to adopt; and therefore, he was now anxious to state his views of what really took place, which fully confirmed the report which the secretary had read. If, as Mr. Hume supposed, the Chairman had made his amendment with the intention that the Directors would prepare the papers and lay them before the proprietors, was it credible that the mover and seconder would have refused immediately to withdraw their motion? But what did they do? They continued the discussion for some time afterwards. Therefore he hoped, at least, after what he had stated, his learned friend Mr. Serjeant Gaselse would see he must have been altogether mistaken about what had really occurred. Surely after that statement Mr. Hume would retract anything he had said harshly of the Chairman.

Mr. Lewis thought the present discussion ought not to be continued; but there was one question, and a very important one, which he wished to put to the Chairman. At the last meeting, Mr. Clarke asked the Chairman whether the Court of Directors had referred the question as to the construction of the treaty to Mr. Elphinstone. They all knew that Mr. Elphinstone was the author of that treaty, and was competent to decide the question; and he should be glad if the Chairman would inform the Proprietors whether the Court of Directors had ar had not referred the matter to Mr. Elphinstone?

A Proprietor thought it was a most extraordinary principle to put forth, that those who prepared the laws should be called upon to explain them.

The Chairman.—When the Proprietors see the papers they will know whether Mr. Elphinstone's opinion has been asked or not. I cannot answer the question further.

Mr. Lewis understood, from the nature of the Chairman's reply, that no reference had been made to Mr. Elphinatone to ascertain his opinion as to the construction to be put upon the treaty. In his humble judgment, it was a course which ought to be taken

The motion for printing and circulating the papers was then put and agreed to; and the Court adjourned.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT. House of Commons, Fas. 13.

Railways in India.— In reply to a question put by Lord Mahon,

Sir J. Hobhouse said: "It is perfectly true that negotiations are going on between certain railway companies and the Indian Government; but, as these negotiations are still pending, no good can arise from entering into explanations on the subject. I can assure the noble lord and the promoters of Indian railways, that the best attention will be given to the matter, and that no time will be lost in bringing the negotiations to a close."

Mr. Bright asked whether the Indian Government had determined that it would not make these railways itself, but leave them to be constructed by private companies?

them to be constructed by private companies?

Sir.J. Hobhouse replied: "The Indian Government have come to no such determination. The state of the case is this,—it has been thought much better that these undertakings should be performed by private companies, but most assuredly the Indian Government have not come to any determination that, if they are not performed by private companies, they shall not do so themselves."

War in the Punjab.—In answer to a question put by Mr. G. Thompson, Sir J. Hobhouse said, as at present advised, he had no papers to lay before the House on the subject of the war in the Punjado.

LAW

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, FEB. 15 AND 16.

The Queen v. Kendall and Others.—This was an indictment under 49 Geo. III. c. 126, preferred against William Richard Creed Kendall, Maria Binckes, Violet Linley, William Moore, and George Bickley, for the sale of a cadetship in the East-India Company's service. The indictment charged that Kendall unlawfully and corruptly did bargain for the sale to William Moore (another of the defendants) of a certain office, commission, place, and appointment, under the appointment and control of the East-India Company, to wit, the office, commission, place, and appointment of a cadet, and that the other defendants unlawfully did abet and assist him in so doing. There were seventeen other counts, varying this statement of the charge, several of which charged a conspiracy.

Mr. J. A. Russell said he appeared for the defendant Moore, who had pleaded "Not Guilty," but was now anxious, by leave of the Court, to retract his plea, and plead "Guilty." A verdict of "Guilty" was then taken as to this defendant.

The Attorney-General detailed the case to the Jury, and stated that it referred to two distinct transactions-first, negotiating for the appointment; and secondly, receiving money for the sale of it. Mr. Moore was a shipowner at Plymouth, who, in 1845, was desirous of obtaining a cadetship for his son Henry. He communicated with a Mr. Lavers, an agent, in Lambeth. In consequence of a communication from Mr. Lavers, in April, 1845, he came to London, and was by him introduced to Mrs. Linley, who resided at No. 6, Foley Place, at whose house he was also introduced to Mrs. Binckes and Mr. Kendall. Mr. Kendall at one time had been the acting consul at St. Michael's, and Mrs. Binckes pretended to be very highly connected; she had friends in the distinguished ranks of life, for she had obtained the appointment in question through Lady Ripon. lady, not suspecting any impropriety, had solicited the nomina-tion from her husband, the Earl of Ripon, who, as President of the Board of Control, had the power of giving it. Mrs. Linley was the daughter of Dr. Gilchrist, and the wife of Mr. Linley, the composer. Mr. Bickley was an attorney. In June, 1845, Mr. Moore came again to London, and went with Mr. Lavers to Foley Place, where he was introduced by Mr. Lavers to Mrs. Linley as a gentleman who wanted to obtain a cadetship for his son. Mrs. Linley said she would introduce him the next day to Mr. Kendall, who would get the appointment through a very high lady. Mr. Moore, by agreement, went the next day to Mrs. Linley's house to meet Mr. Kendall, but was not accompanied, as on the first occasion, by Mr. Lavers. He was then introduced to Kendall by Mrs. Linley, who said that he (Mr. Moore) was the gentleman she had spoken to him about, who wanted a cadetship for his son, and the appointment would be obtained by Kendall by means of a high lady. Kendall then said that, unless Moore deposited 1,000% he would not move any further in the matter. It was finally agreed that 1,000% abould be deposited with Mr. Kendall. On the following day Mr. Moore again went to Foley Place, where he saw Mrs. Linley and Mr. Kendall, and being provided with two 500%. notes, he gave half of each of them to Mrs. Linley, and agreed to give the other two halves to Mr. Kendall on obtaining the appointment. The same day Mr. Moore communicated what he had done to Mr. Lavers, who had cautioned him against parting with his money, and by agreement Mr. Lavers went to the Bank the next day, and gave orders to stop the payment of the notes until further notice. The day following Mr. Moore went to Mrs. Linley's house, where he met Mr. Kendall and Mrs. Binckes. The matter of the cadetship was then discussed, and Mrs. Binckes promised to use her influence to get the appointment from the Earl of Ripon. The appointment not having been obtained as had been expected, an application was made by Mr. Moore for the return of the money. Mr. Moore had heard that Mr. Kendall had pledged the two halves of the notes, and could not redeem them; and in August he wrote to Mrs. Linley, threatening to put the matter in the hands of his selicitor if the money was not returned. On the 15th of August, Mr. Kendall redeemed the notes, and they were returned to Mr. Moore by Bickley, who, acting as attorney to Mrs. Binckes, said that she had been obliged to pay 100% to get them back. That sum was afterwards paid to her by Mr. Moore through Bickley, and after the appointment was obtained, Mr. Moore remitted to Mrs. Linley 50l. for the trouble she had taken in the business. A letter, addressed by Mrs. Linley to Mr. Moore, thanked him for the 50l., adding, that if Mr. Mosze's other son would like to have an appointment as assistant-surgeon, she could get it for him. The negotiation having been thus broken off, Mr. Moore placed his son with a stock-broker in the city; but on the 26th of August, 1845, he received from Mrs. Binckes a letter, inclosing another from Lady Ripon, which contained the nomination. Mrs. Binckes requested Mr. Moore to acknowledge the receipt of the nomination by returns. of post, and to be careful to fill it up correctly. The nomination having been filled up, young Mr. Moore went through his example. mination at the East-India House, and the appointment was made by the Directors. Upon that appointment being obtained Mr. Moore was to pay 1,000l. Bickley was present at the second negotiation for the sale of the appointment, and the money was paid to him under the pretence of its being a loan. was proved by a memorandum in the handwriting of Mr. Bickley, and signed by him, in which he stated that Mr. Moore had advanced to him the sum of 250l. on account, making 900l. in all. towards the completion of the loan. On the 1st November, 1845, Bickley wrote to Mr. Moore, and acknowledged the receipt of 250l, being the balance of the 1,000l., and, alluding to a letter to Mr. Moore which he supposed must have miscarried; added that it was of no consequence, as there was nothing in it: which he should care about being seen. In July, 1846, reports-were current, which induced the Directors of the East-India. Company to make an investigation which was calculated to expose the transactions.

Mr. Melvill, the secretary to the East-India Company, and other witnesses, proved the nomination and appointment of Henry Moore to a cadetship in September, 1845. Mr. Melvill, on cross-examination said, Mr. Moore was examined two or three times before the Secret Committee of the East-India Company. The examination was taken down in writing, and was in the hands of the professional gentlemen. Linley, Kendall, Spy, and others were also examined in September and October, 1846. Notes were written to them to inform them on what subject they were requested to attend.

William Bunbury Lavers said, I am an agent, is China Terrace, Lambeth. I knew Mr. Moore, of Plymouth, wanted an appointment for his son in India. In consequence of that I wrote. to him in June, 1845. Shortly afterwards Mr. Mbore came to my house, and on the 6th of June, I went with him to No. 6, Foley Place, and introduced him to Mrs. Linley, as a gentleman whom I had previously mentioned to her as being desirous of obtaining a cadetship for his son. I had previously said to Mr. Moore, that Mrs. Linley had said that 1,000d must be deposited; but I advised him in her presence not to do that: Mrs. Linley said, she would introduce Mr. Moore the next day to a great lady, whom I did not know, who would get the appointment. After that I know nothing about the matter. I had been to Mre-Linley's the next morning, at nine o'clock, at her request, and met Mr. Moore by accident as I was leaving. I cautioned himnot to part with his money. I called on him at the Portugal' Hotel the next day; and in consequence of what passed; I stopped the two notes for 500% each at the Benk. A few weeks afterwards I called on Mr. Moore in Arundel Street, Strand. His son was there, and Mr. Kendall came in as I was leaving. Mr. Moore spoke of the appointment, and Mr. Kendall objected to my being present. I said he had failed to carry out the engagement, and that he was bound to return the money. He said he had nothing to say to me, and he should not return it. I told Mr. Moore not to let Mr. Kendall leave till he had given back the money. Mr. Kendall said the appointment would begot from a high personage, and from the Board of Control. I heard nothing more till November, 1848, when Mrs. Linley called upon me just after I had received an official letter from the East-India Company: We spoke of Mr. Moore's appointment, which was being investigated at the India House. She wanted me to bear her out in her testimony, but she did not tell' me what she had said. I told her I would tell the truth.

William Moore (the defendant) was then examined:—He-said, I am ashipowner at Plymouth. In 1845, I was desirous of obtaining a cadetship for my son. I was in communication with the last witness, and came to town in consequence of a letter I received from him in April, 1845. He-took me to Mrs. Linley's, introduced me to Mrs. Linley, and said I wanted to obtain a cadetship for my son. Mrs. Linley said she knew a gentleman to whom she would introduce me next day, who could get it through a very high lady. I went there again next day by appointment, but Mr. Lavers did not go. I found Mrs. Linley and Mr. Kendall there. Mrs. Linley said I was the gentleman she had spoken to him about, who wanted a cadetship for his son. The name of the high lady was not mentioned. Mr. Kendall said she was a cousin of the Queen; but told me that, unless I deposited 1,000l. he would not move any further in it. I declined to do so then, and made an appointment to meet next day, and then saw the same two parties, when Mr. Kendall said the lady would not move any further unless 1,000l. was deposited. I asked what security I should have if I gave the money? and as they proposed none, I thought if I deposited half the notes I should have security. It was so sgreed, and I got two 500L notes, which I took to Mrs. Linley's. I put them on the table, and Mrs. Linley, with a pair of scissors, cut them in halves. I gave two halves to Mr. Kendall, and put the others in my pocket. That evening I told Mr. Lavers what I had done, and in consequence of what he said I desired him to go the Bank and stop payment of the notes. On a day appointed at the last meeting, I called again at Mrs. Linley's, who took me into the drawingroom, and left me there for an hour or more, when Mr. Kendall and Mrs. Binckes arrived in a carriage. They remained below for about twenty minutes, and then came into the drawing-room. Mrs. Linley introduced me to Mrs. Binckes, and said I was the person who wished for a cadetship. Mrs. Binckes said she could procure it. She said she was cousin to the Queen; that Lord Goderich called upon her the day before, and through Lord Ripon she was to have the appointment. She also said Lord Ripon's family were under an obligation to her, and that they would repay it. She desired to see my son, for he might not be fit for the situation, and it was arranged that I was to send for him; I wrote to Plymouth; my son came up, and I took him to Mrs. Linley's, and about an hour after Mrs. Binckes came with Mr. Kendall. I introduced my son to Mrs. Binckes, who approved of his appearance, and said she would take him to Lord He was to call at her house in St. John's Wood, and go with her, which he did. I several times went to Mrs. Binckes's house, and dined with her once or twice. I never knew her before this transaction. The affair went on for a considerable time, and I got impatient. I wrote to Mrs. Binckes, and addressed my note to Wilton Lodge, St. John's Wood. received an answer from her, and in consequence I came to London, and saw her in August, 1845. Mrs. Binckes had removed to Circus Road in St. John's Wood. Mr. Bickley was introduced to me by Mrs. Binckes as her solicitor. Mrs. Binckes, in presence of Mr. Bickley, said she had had much difficulty to get back the notes, and had borrowed 100% of god-papa," by means of which she had recovered them. Mr. Bickley confirmed what she said, and took out the two half notes, and returned them to me. I had the other halves in my pocket, and went to the Bank and revoked the stoppage. After that I called on Mr. Bickley at his office in Barge Yard, Bucklersbury, and had conversation with him about the notes. He spoke of the great difficulty which he and Mrs. Binckes had had in getting back the notes, and that Mrs. Binckes ought not to suffer for it. On this, I went to Lubbock's bank, and drew a check for 100%, and got the money, and gave it to Mr. Bickley to remunerate Mrs. Binckes for the 100% which she said it had cost her to get back the two notes. I then abandoned the idea of getting a cadetship, and placed my son with a stockbroker in the city. Shortly after that, I received this letter from Mrs. Binckes, and in consequence came up to London. I took Lady Ripon's letter, and I think I gave it to Mrs. Binckes. I went to the India House, and got the necessary certificates to fill up. Shortly after this Mr. Kendall came to me in Arundel Street, and wanted money. He said he had some railway shares to pay for, and he wanted some money immediately. I objected to pay till the appointment was completed. I went with him to Mr. Bickley's. The necessary forms were sent down to Plymouth and filled up, and were then taken to the India House. I saw Mr. Bickley and Mr. Kendall together frequently at Mr. Bickley's office. When my son had passed, I went to Mr. Bickley's office. I then paid 450% to Mr. Bickley. In all, I paid him 800l. or 850l. I saw Mr. Bickley write this memorandum for the receipt of 800l. "towards the loan," as it is called. I advanced no money on loan to Mr. Bickley or to Mrs. Binckes or Mrs. Linley. After this I returned to Plymouth, and soon after I sent 50l. to Mrs. Linley. I received this letter from Mrs. Linley. (Letter read, acknowledging receipt of 50l., and saying that if Mr. Moore's other son would like to have the appointment of assistant surgeon in India, she (Mrs. Linley) could get it for him.) I afterwards directed 150l to be paid by Messrs Lubbocks to Mr. Bickley, and received a letter from him acknowledging the receipt of it. (The letters received by the witness from Mrs. Binckes, and alluded to by the Attorney-General in his opening, were here put in and read.) I received this letter from Mrs. Binckes on the 15th of August, and came up to town in consequence. I then saw Mrs. Binckes, who told me that the nephew of Lord Gough, who was his aide-de-camp, was going into the line, and that for 1,000l. my son should have the appointment. (Other letters from Mrs. Binckes to the witness, and dated the 2nd and 11th of November, 1846, were then put in and read, in the latter of which she stated that she had been examined at the India House, but the Directors were quite satisfied with the account which she gave of the appointment.) My son went out to India, and died there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Cockburn (for the defendant Kendall), —I can't say when I first made up my mind to withdraw my plea "Not guilty." I had no mind in the matter. I put my-self in my lawyer's hands twelve months ago. He is my legal mind, and keeps my conscience. He made up my legal mind to retract my plea this morning. Since I came to London yester-day, I heard I was to be put into the witness box. At this moment I expect to suffer for what I have done. I have had no promise. This is my handwriting. (The paper in which the witness declared that he neither had paid nor would pay any money for the appointment, was here shown to him.) When I signed this I was aware that I had given money for it. I thought the Act of Parliament was a curious one which allowed me to buy in the line and not in the East-India service. I never had conversation with Mrs. Binckes about money, but I was told at Mr. Bickley's office that money was to be said. I came to town on the 31st of August. My son went to the East-India House the next day, the 1st of September, and I was told at Mr. Bickley's office that 1,000% was to be paid. On the 20th of September my son got the appointment, and I began to pay the money. Mr. Kendall did not ask for the money as a loan. I never heard of a loan till Mr. Bickley's note came. (A paper was here handed to the witness.) I never saw this before. This is my handwriting on the back of it. I have seen it before. It is a note made by Kendall to pay me a sum of money in six weeks. I left it with Mr. Bickley. The money was not to be laid out I left it with Mr. Bickley. in railway shares.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Shee (for the defendant Bickley). I swear I paid Mr. Bickley 100l. When I paid the 800l. I got this paper from Mr. Bickley. It was intended only as a subterfuge to deceive. It is in my handwriting, and copied from what Mr. Bickley wrote. I was in London on the 16th of September, the day it bears date. It was intended as a blind. The promissory note is dated the 10th of September, for 450l. It was done by Mr. Bickley's advice. I left the note in London. It has never been paid.

The Earl of Ripon examined.—In June, 1948, I was President of the Board of Control. I had certain allotted patronage in the East India Company. This nomination of Mr. Moore was filled up by me. I know nothing personally of Mr. Moore or his family. I had known Mis. Binckes, but not personally till May or June, 1845. I can't say my family were under obligations to her. She was not an intimate friend of mine. Mrs. Binckes had applied to Lady Ripon on the subject of the appointment. She was about that time in affliction for the loss of a child. Lady Ripon is very ill. It would be impossible for her to attend.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Wilkins (for the defendant Mrs. Binckes).—Lady Ripon has known Mrs. Binckes since May, 1843.

Mr. Moore was here recalled, and said, that the papers which were put into his hand were written that it might appear that the money was advanced on a loan.

Several witnesses were then called, who proved that, previous to this transaction, Mrs. Binckes had been residing at Croydon with her husband, and had got much into debt with small tradesmen, and that a distress had been put into their house for taxes; and that after this time she appeared to have money, and made several purchases of plate, trinkets, &c.

Evidence was also given with a view to trace the notes to the different defendants.

Mr. Lavers was then recalled, and cross examined by Mr. Chambers (for the defendant Mrs. Linley).—I was induced by Capt. Matthias to represent to Mr. Moore that what I knew he wanted could be obtained. Mr. Linley came to my house and left a message. I saw Mr. Linley at his house, but he left me in a room with Mrs. Linley and Mr. Moore. That was after the notes had been given. My commission was as much as I could get. I was concerned with Capt. Matthias, who is now dead. If I carried the business through, I was to have 150l. for me and Matthias. Mr. Moore paid me 100l. for the trouble I had had. I got some part of it in September, and part in November. I never mentioned this before to-day. I got the money before I was examined at the India House, but I never mentioned it before. I said Mr. Moore had settled with me.

This was the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Cochburn, for Kendall, said, in cases like the present, it was much to be lamented that the biggest delinquent of all generally contrived to escape justice, and that by betraying his associates. So it was in the present case. The jury had to-day seen Mr. Moore, the chief offender, the very man who had paid the money, coming forward to accuse those whom he had thus led into this transaction. When men did anything wrong, and violated any rule of morality, they generally had virtue enough remaining to be ashamed of their misconduct; but Mr. Moore, so far from feeling any compunction, had come into the witnessbox with the most cool and unblushing effrontery, and seemed to think that his conduct was quite free from blame, because, forsooth, he knew, as he said, that half the officers of the East-India Company had done the same thing, and the Act of Parliament was a curious one, which allowed him to buy in the line and not in the East-India service. Indeed, he had never seen a more indecent exhibition than that made by Moore. During the whole day he had been sitting in Court, and exhibiting all the heat and zeal of a partisan; and whenever a witness said anything which seemed to bear hard upon any one of the defendants, he appeared to exult at the prospect of being able to obtain a It was too evident that he had the utmost possible interest in obtaining a conviction. It was only that very morning that he had made up his mind—his "legal mind," as he called it—to retract his plea and plead "guilty;" and no one in the world could doubt that he felt that his only chance of not being brought up for judgment was in giving such evidence as would lead to the conviction of the other defendants. These circumstances would convince the jury that no credit was to be given to the evidence of an accomplice who had shown such un-blushing impudence, and such a total disregard of moral obligations. That man had signed a paper to be laid before the Di-rectors, in which he declared that he neither had given nor would give any money for procuring the commission; and, after having made that solemn declaration, he now came into the witness-box and said he had paid the sum of 1,000% for it. He was, therefore, upon the horns of this dilemma, - either his solemn declaration to the Directors was a lie, or the evidence he had that day given was perjured. How could the jury give any credit to a witness like that, who came into Court with a halter round his neck? The learned counsel then commented upon the facts proved in reference to the first transaction, and contended that there was no imputation upon Kendall, who had returned the notes within a few days after they were called for. As to the second transaction, it was impossible to ascertain clearly the truth of the whole case; Mr. Bickley, who could have thrown great light upon it, had been included in the indictment. At the most, it was only one of suspicion against his

Mr. M. Chambers, for Mrs. Linley, complained of the numerous counts of the indictment; there were as many as eighteen counts, and the counsel for the prosecution had refused to say upon which of them they would rely. He then commented upon the evidence as applicable to the several counts, and contended that none of them was proved in reference to his client. The witness Lavers was not to be trusted in regard to any statement which he might make; and as to the witness Moore, he should say nothing of him, Mr. Cockburn had already dealt with that witness as he deserved. A letter had been read from Mrs. Linley, addressed to Mr. Moore, acknowledging the receipt of 504. as a gratuity for preventing him from being cheated. That transaction was entirely in Mrs. Linley's favour, instead of being against her, and a proof of any guilty participation in an illegal act. All those counts, therefore, which referred to the receipt of 50L, ought at least to have been omitted from the indictment. He thought, therefore, Mrs. Linley had been hardly dealt with. She might have been left out as well as that gentleman, Mr. Lavers, the general agent, who had got 150% for his share in the transaction. She had only received the sum of 504, and that was a gratuity for an act of justice and kindness which she had done to Mr. Moore.

Mr. Serjeant Shee, for the defendant George Bickley, an attorney of this Court, said, it was one of the unfortunate circumstances in which an attorney was placed, that he was often necessarily, and, from the very nature of his office, innocently, complicated in transactions of this kind. The question was, whether Mr. Bickley did knowingly aid and abet the other defendants in this transaction; and for his defence the defendant threw himself upon the justice of the jury, who would not drive him from his profession, and subject him to disgrace and infamy, in defiance of the documents which had been produced. It did not appear that Mr. Bickley joined the parties with any motive of participation. It was clear that Mrs. Binckes had connections, either direct or indirect, with persons of influence, and that she had promised to use her influence to get the appointment for Mr. Moore; and when the two halves of the 500% notes had been paid by Mr. Moore, Mrs. Binckes had exerted herself in order to get them back. When Mr. Moore afterwards called in order to get them back. upon her, Mrs. Binckes said she had had great difficulty in getting them back, which fact was confirmed by Mr. Bickley, who immediately produced the notes, and returned them to Mr. Moore. The conduct of Bickley in that transaction was entirely free from blame. But suppose Mrs. Binckes had been guilty of some act of a guilty nature which caused anxiety to her mind, it was the duty of Mr. Bickley, as an attorney, to protect her, and save her from the consequences of an illegal transaction, in which she had been involved. The learned serjeant then said, that he was not ashamed to say, in the presence of the Lord Chief Justice, that there was no moral harm in doing, in reference to this transaction, what all the world did; but there was great moral harm in a man's signing a solemn declaration, as Mr. Moore had done, that he had not paid any money for the appointment, when he had done so.

Mr. Serjeant Wilkins, for Mrs. Binckes, complained that, though Mr. Moore had been under examination for two days at the East-India House, the counsel for the prosecution had not given the defendants the advantage of seeing whether he told the same tale to-day as he had done when examined before the Secret Committee. Mrs. Binckes had been the friend of Lady Ripon since 1843, and it was much to be regretted that her Ladyship was not able to attend this trial, as no doubt she would have been able to explain this transaction in a manner which could not be expected from Lord Ripon, who knew little or nothing All that Mrs. Binckes had done was this, -she was told that Mr. Moore wished to obtain an appointment for his son, and nothing being said in her presence about money, she promised that she would do what she could, through Lord Ripon, to obtain the appointment. In the first instance, two 500% notes had been given, but it was not pretended that Mrs. Binckes had anything to do with that transaction. It was proved that Mrs. Binckes had been examined at the India House, and that the Secret Committee were quite satisfied with the account which she then gave of her share in obtaining the appointment. He was confident that the whole charge originated with Mr. Lavers, who was actuated by vindictiveness, in consequence of his not being able to obtain that share in the money which he wanted.

Lord Denman, in summing up, said, it had been remarked by Mr. Serjeant Wilkins that prosecutions like the present did great harm; but, in his opinion, their effect was quite the con-trary. They were calculated to do great good, and were absolutely necessary, to prevent the country from being overrun with corrupt practices and profligate dealing. The exposure of these acts, and the observations made on some of the witnesses, tended to do good, by the disgust which fell upon some of them; and he thought the public was greatly indebted to the East-India Company for bringing cases of this kind before a jury. The offence charged was not only an offence against the Act of Parliament, but it went to the ground of the moral principles of all men, and no man could be guilty of violating it without violating those principles which ought to regulate the conduct of us all. It was to be regretted that there were so many charges in the indictment, and so many variations in the statement of the charges; but that arose in a great measure from the circum-stances, for the prosecutors could not know beforehand what were the facts as they were likely to be proved in evidence. His Lordship said, he should like to have heard some explanation of some of the letters written by the defendants; but, as that had not been given, the jury must come to their own conclusion as to their tendency.

The jury then retired for some time, and on their return into Court found all the defendants Guilty on the 14th count, on the supposition (as one of the jury said) that that count comprised both the transactions; and, after some discussion, both the transactions; and, after some discussion,

Lord Denman took the opinion of the jury upon two questions, the answers to which were a verdict of Guilty against all the defendants, except Bickley, on the first transaction (that of conspiring to negotiate for the sale of the appointment), and against all the defendants, except Linley, for the same offence in reference to the second transaction.

The use of letters has been immemorially known to all the more civilized nations of the Indian Archipelago, of the brown-complexioned, lank-haired race, and many alphabets, at once distinct from each other, and not borrowed from any foreign source, are to be found among them, from Sumatra to the west, to Celebes and the Phillippines to the east.—Crawfurd, Journ. Ind. Arch.

Cacao, or the chocolate nut, is cultivated in the highlands, but mostly on the coast, of the province of Minahassa, the capital of which, Menado (situated in a bay on the west side of the northerly promontory of Celebes), has been opened by the Netherlands Indian Government to foreign trade. The plantations of cacao are considerable, and this branch of industry may be easily extended. The preparation of this product differs from that in the West Indies.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA. - On the 8th February, a deputation of thirty gentlemen interested in the promotion of railways in India waited on the Board of Control, and the interview lasted upwards of an hour. There were present Sir John Hobhouse, the President of the Board, accompanied by other members of it, and Mr. Wilson, M.P., the secretary; on the part of the East-Indian Railway Company. Mr. Aglionby, M.P., the chairman, with other directors, and Mr. D. Noad, the secretary; the chairmen of the other Indian railways; Mr. Bright, M.P., Mr. chairmen of the other Indian railways; Mr. Bright, M.P. Chapman; the president and other members of the Manchester 'Chamber of Commerce and commercial associations; of the Blackburn Chamber of Commerce; and other members of Parliament and gentlemen connected with commerce. The Board having heard the representations made by the members of the deputation, the latter withdrew. As the proceedings were represented to be confidential, there is no immediate means of knowing what was the result, further than that the President assured the deputation that due attention would be paid to their statements, and that he felt inclined, as then advised, to render less stringent one of the terms intended to be offered by the Court of Directors to the railway companies, viz., that which is commonly called the confiscation clause; but Sir John Hobhouse did not give the deputation to understand that he was disposed to yield upon the main point on which the railway managers seemed principally to insist-that is, on the unconditional guaranteed dividend of five per cent.; on the contrary, lest any misunderstanding should prevail on this head, Mr. Wilson, the secretary, declared—and his statement was confirmed by the President—that the concession to which allusion had been made had no reference whatever to the guaranteed dividend. Nothing was said of the Government granting pecuniary

The report then mentioned the interview with Sir John Hobhouse on the 8th February, who said that the Company had been represented to him as defunct, and that he had received a memorial from Sir John Campbell stating that four-fifths of the Company were desirous of having its affairs wound up; whereupon the chairman of the Railway Company and other directors rebutted this statement, assuring Sir John that, if the guarantee of 5 per cent. were conceded, there would be no difficulty in raising the money; subsequently, Sir John Hobhouse communicated with the Court of Directors, and the latter with the railway directors, who made a proposition to the Court, which, while it secures the principle of immunity from loss, and a return of 5 per cent. on the capital paid up, would meet the views of the latter: the result, so soon as the negotiations are brought to a conclusion, would be laid before the proprietors. port added, that the directors had effected compromises with five engineers for 4,839l.. the annual expense of this department being now reduced from 9,420L to 1,296L. # NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A Letter to the Right Hon. Sir J. Hobbonse, President of the Board of Control, on the Baggage of the Indian Army. By Sir CHARLES JAMES NAPIER, G.C.B., Lieutenant-General, &c. London, Moxon.

Sin Charles Napier has, in this pamphlet, hit the great blot of our Indian army, as well as of Eastern armies in general, to which the overwhelming incumbrance of baggage becomes truly impedimenta. When Sir Charles tells us that an Indian army requires more baggage than any other army in the world; that the Europeans of that army require more baggage than any other part, and that the private sepoys comparatively collect more baggage than the officers, we are not surprised at his assuming 20,000 camels to be required for an ordinary Indian army.

"Let us suppose (he says) our baggage to require 20,000 camels; their being led, as is the usual way in the East, by a string fastened through the nostril of one animal and tied to the tail of his feader, these 20,000 camels occupy about fifty miles; allowing five yards from the nose of one animal to the nose of his follower; and consequently half the camels would not have quitted the old camp from which the army marched, when the leading camels had arrived on the new encamping-ground! This shows the reader what an enormous affair is the baggage of an Indian army; because, though it does not march in so regular a train as I have just described, yet, place the animals as you will, the incumbrance of this unwieldly mass is immense; for the animals and their burdens must have room. Here they are jostling-crowding in now-spreading widely then-at times the strong animals far in front—the weaker as far in rear some dying-some throwing their loads and running away-the tired servants labouring after, and often-very often, getting slain, or, losing the column, perishing miserably-thousands of camels dying, not only from fatigue, but from ill-usage by both soldiers and the drivers, and from being always overloaded. Such is the picture of the baggage of an Indian army: Smithfield market alone can rival it!"

Besides the camels, there are the camp-followers, the usual proportion of whom is five (non-combatants) to every fighting man, for whom food, and sometimes water, must be carried; and this unorganized, unmanageable mob, when attacked, will always fall back upon the soldiers, creating the utmost con-

For this clog upon the movements of an Indian army Sir Charles has devised a remedy in a baggage-corps, -an experiment which has been tried, and found fully to answer, - and he expresses his confidence that, sooner or later, a baggage-corps must become a part of the army of India.

For the details of the plan, and for various shrewd and sags cious observations upon the subject, we refer to the pamphlet, which deserves the attention of our military readers.

THE KIMA, KEMO, OR CHAMA SHELL .- The giant cockle is sometimes of such an enormous size, that a single valve will measure three feet in length, two in breadth, across the centre, and, taking in all inequalities, eight feet in outer circumference; this of course being no more than half the dimensions the shell would give were it perfect. The great power to hold whatever these kimas may close on, in their live state, is exemplified by an occurrence related by the inhabitants of Bencoolen. A tempest, having dislodged a kima of unusual size from its bed, cast it on a part of the coast where, in very shallow water, it lay open at the moment an unlucky tiger clapped his brawny paw upon it, when instantly the bivalve closed with the force of a vice, and there held the brute till released by the natives brought to the beach by his roars, who soon made a prize of both tiger and LIGHTNING frequently (nay generally), after striking a tree, in place of dissipating itself in the earth, ascends again in search of a better conductor than the ground. In an instance observed in Ceylon, the fluid struck first only one tree, and descended into the ground to the depth of eighteen inches, emerging thence it travelled in every direction in a square of upwards of 30 feet, killing other eleven trees, and scorching the grass as a red-hot iron roller would do.

Theophrastus gives an exact account of pepper and its varieties. This condiment, which was very early known in the western world, has always been found principally in India, and best in Malabar; its name bespeaks the country of its production : Sanskrit, pippali ; whence Greek, πέπερι ; Latin, piper ; English, pepper.

• 3.º This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,040 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.

HINDISTA NI GRA MM AR in the Oriental and Roman.

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Persian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. CLEAR and SOFT SKIN. — ROWLANDS' KALY—DOR,—an Oriental Balsamic Preparation, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It is distinguished for its extremely bland, purifying, and soothing effects on the skin; while by its action on the pores and minute secretory vessels, it expels all impurities from the surface, allays every tendency to inflammation, and thus effectually dissipates all redness, tan, pimples, spots, freckles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every toilet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shawing, will find it allay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. During the heat and dust of summer, or frost and black winds of winter, and, in cases of sun-burn, stings of insects, chilblains, or chapped skin, or incidental inflammation, its virtues have long and extensively bees acknowledged. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britatin, and the several courts of Europe, together with the ditte of the aristoeracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Car.—Beware of spurious "Kalyddas" for sale, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellant action endangering health. not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

PINGWORMS, SCORBUTIC AFFECTIONS, AND OTHER SKIN DISEASES, CURABLE BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—In the East Indies, diseases of the skin are very prevalent among the natives, and Holloway's Omtiment and Pills have been most successfully used in a variety of cases. The Editor of the Mofusciilte instances that of a coole employed in his establishment, who was afflicted with myriads of ringworms, which defied all the Meerut doctors, and promised to devour the poor man, before he was even under ground. Holloway's Pills and Ointment were then tried, and in a month be was parfectly restored to his former healthy condition and cleanliness of skin.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both milliners and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of asserts and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the loth of May. 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premium be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

EMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION.

MMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, MMIGRATION being much required in AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, &c., and as the supposed expense of an OUTFIT often prevents individuals emigrating, S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, OUTFITTERS, and CONTRACTORS (having a large interest to maintain those Colonies), have been avoised to make known that they can supply a comfortable Outfit, including Bedding, for Male of Fenale Emigrants, from Four Pounds (net) upwards, or less (Two Pounds if needful), and for Children in proportion, at No. 4, Bishopsoate Street within (opposite the London Tavern), where lists will be given on application.

S. W. S. & Co., being the makers of nearly every article in all the Outfits they supply, and as one of their objects is to promote Earigranton, they neither receive from Agents, or psy the too usual commission to any person introducing Passengers to be fitted out, so that the Passage and Outfit may be procured at the least possible expense; but they will, on application, advise Passengers how to obtain the most economic passage to the Colonies. They have a Representative in every Australian Colony, to whom they ship Clothing monthly; thus they would forward small parcels free of expense.

NAYAL and MILITARY OFFICERS, MIGHEIPERN, CADETS, CIVILIANS, LADIES, &c., are outfitted as heretofore, at the Cabin-Passenger Outfitting being exclusively at No. 4, Bishopsoate Street within, London, and each branch at St. George's Crescent, Liverpool.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE absence of official reports of the military operations on the Jelum, which we are about to relate, is deeply to be lamented. It has deprived the public of the means of obtaining an accurate knowledge of the main facts; it has exposed the Commander-in-Chief and some part of his force to obloquy, perhaps unmerited; and, the casualties being unusually heavy, the want of accurate lists of the killed and wounded officers must cause great and unnecessary anxiety in families. It may be added, that the omitting to publish official reports is considered in many quarters equivalent to suppressing them; and in these times of almost universal publicity, an invidious construction is always put upon any act of suppression. The "notification" of the Governor-General, it is true, accounts for the non-publication of the details by the Government, which could not publish what it had not received; the fault, therefore, if any, must rest elsewhere.*

Our narrative of the sanguinary battle of Mojnawalla,which, though termed a victory, might by a not very partial historian be described as a defeat,-must therefore be compiled from the details furnished by writers on the spot to the various public journals, which are unanimous in their condemnation of the general. "Not since the destruction of the garrison of Cabul," says the Bombay Times, "has so heavy a catalogue of blunders and misfortunes been carried home from India as that which the present mail conveys; we have, for the first time since 1842, to give particulars of the annihilation of half-regiments, from the sheer mismanagement of the commanding officer." The Bombay Telegraph believes "the opinion to be almost universal, that the terrible slaughter during the engagement is attributable, in a great measure, to the want of forethought, judgment, and tactical skill on the part of the commander."

The previous accounts left Lord Gough and Shere Singh inactive in their respective positions, about a march from each other, on the 5th January; the former being encamped at a place called Janiki; the latter at Moong, on the left bank of the Jelum. It was understood that the Commanderin-Chief intended to await the fall of Mooltan before he attacked the Sikh army; but either the arrival of Sir Henry Lawrence (who reached his camp from that of the Governor-General on the 10th), or the unfavourable effects which his inactivity was exerting upon the natives of the Doab, and the opportunity it afforded to Shere Singh of augmenting his army, induced his lordship to alter his resolution.

Accordingly, the British troops, which had been moved to Lusooree, about a couple of miles in advance of Janiki, on the 9th, being joined on the 11th by Brigadier Pennycuick, with the 6th brigade of infantry, on the following morning, marched to Dinghee, in the direction of the enemy.

A reconnoissance of the enemy's position having been made, the Sikh army was found to extend from Moong to the fortified village of Russoolpore, + a mile from north-east to southwest, the Jelum covering their rear, over which a well-constructed bridge had been thrown. Their magazines were at Russoolpore, where the spur extending from the mountains terminated, and near to which was a narrow pass or gorge, well adapted for retreat. Their flanks were admirably secured; the centre was protected by field-works, which again were covered by jungle and broken ground. It was, in short, a position of great natural and artificial strength.

The original plan of Lord Gough was to attack and carry Russool, forming the key of the position, which would be turned; secure the magazines, command the field-works, and cut off the enemy's means of retreat.

At seven o'clock in the morning of the 13th, the British army marched in order of battle, in columns of brigades, the 6th brigade of infantry being in reserve in rear of the heavy guns. After traversing about three miles of tolerably open country, they came in sight of the Sikh camp, when they encountered one of the enemy's out-posts, and were fired upon from a low hill that overlooked the jungle, which, though dense in patches, admitted of a passage. The heavy guns, with the horse batteries, were brought up to clear the ground, and, after a few rounds, the enemy retreated, leaving their tents standing, and the column advanced over the ground abandoned by the Sikh pickets.

At this moment, the Commander-in-Chief is represented to have suddenly, without consultation with any one, changed his plan of operations, deploying his infantry line in front of Moong, thus showing the Sikhs that their strong post at Russool was no longer threatened.

No enemy being in sight at this time (though their camp was only two or three miles distant, on a rising ground, with jungle between), as the troops had been six hours under arms, without rest or refreshment, orders were given to mark out the British camp, the Commander-in-Chief having decided upon deferring the attack until the next morning; when about 2 P.M., a round shot or two from the enemy's guns, falling near Lord Gough, showed him that the place was not safe for a halt; whereupon he determined upon an immediate attack of the enemy, "without having taken," says the Delhi Gazette, "the usual and necessary precautions of ascertaining, by a reconnoissance in that direction, where the strength of the enemy lay, and without the smallest preliminary arrangements for the advance."

The Sikhs were effectually concealed behind thick jungle, and after a cannonade of an hour or two, the only guide being the smoke of the enemy's guns, the left (Brigadier Campbell's) division was directed to make a flank movement into the jungle, in which they exposed their own flank to a murderous cross fire from the Sikh batteries on their left, which had not been observed. Hoggan's brigade carried everything before it, storming batteries and spiking guns. Pennycuick's brigade, consisting of H.M.'s 24th and the 45th N.I., having been pushed forward, and being unsupported by artillery, suffered dreadfully. They were at length ordered to charge up a steep hill against a battery: though almost exhausted, they stormed the battery at the bayonet's point, and were spiking the guns, when a Sikh regiment, hid in the jungle, opened so fierce a fire that they were obliged to retire, suffering greatly in their retreat. Out of 800 that went into action, H.M.'s 24th lost 248 men killed, and 244 wounded; 13 officers, including Brigadier Pennycuick, the lieutenant-colonel, the major, 4 captains, and 7 subalterns, were killed, and 10 wounded.

As soon as the 3rd and 4th brigades were known to be engaged, the 5th was sent against the centre of what was "supposed to be" the enemy's line, and they advanced in the most undaunted manner, under Brigadier Mountain, through brushwood jungle, in the face of a storm of round shot, grape, and musketry, which, it is said, " mowed down officers and men by dozens." Still they advanced, stormed batteries, and spiked guns, but found the enemy close upon them on every side, pouring such volleys of musketry on their front, flank, and rear, that, being isolated and unsupported, they were constrained to retreat, which they did in the most determined manner. "The conduct of the European and native infantry," observes the Delhi Gazette, "who were, it appears, not supported, as they should have been, by artillery or cavalry, for want of due and proper arrangements, was, to use the emphatic word of several correspondents, 'magnificent.'"

Meanwhile, Major-General Gilbert and Brigadier Godby, who were on the extreme right of the infantry line, moving forward their brigade through dense jungle, came upon the enemy's infantry, and opened their fire; but the masses of the Sikhs were so numerous that they were outflanked, and a terrific fire of musketry on all sides forced them to retire. Two companies of the 2nd European regiment charged in the most gallant manner; but they were surrounded, and, although they fought desperately, they would have been destroyed, but that Dawes's battery came to their rescue, beat off the enemy, and took their guns.

On the extreme left, the cavalry, under Brigadier White, made a dashing charge, and contributed much to the defeat of the enemy; whilst the cavalry on the extreme right (consisting of Brigadier Pope's force, of the 9th Lancers, the 14th Light Dragoons, the 1st and 6th Light Cavalry), having been taken in advance of their horse artillery (Lane's, Christie's, and Huish's troops), were directed to charge a body of the enemy's cavalry. It appears that they got entangled in the jungle, and being exposed to a terrific fire, a battery, which it was impossible to charge, opening upon them, it is said that they mistook an order of Brigadier Pope to move to the right or left for an order to retire; upon which they faced about, and, in spite of their officers, left the field (except a body of the 9th Lancers, who were rallied), and made direct for the artillery, through which they dashed, upsetting tumbrils and riding down gunners, and kept their course until they reached the field hospital. This is the statement given in the papers, on the concurrent authority of various letters; but the subject will, no doubt, be investigated. Whilst the cavalry were thus jammed amongst the artillery, the firing of the guns was necessarily suspended, and the enemy, seeing the disorder, followed our cavalry, and got amongst the horseartillery, cutting down 73 gunners, with Major Christie, who commanded, and Lieutenant Manson; Lieutenant Dundas being wounded. Captain Huish escaped only by Major Steuart, of the 14th Dragoons, shooting a Sikh who had his sword raised to cut him down. Brigadier Pope was mortally wounded, and Major Ekins, deputy-adjutantgeneral, was killed while endeavouring to rally the retreating corps. The Sikhs carried off six of our guns, two of which were, however, afterwards recovered.

An occurrence of a still more culpable character remains to be related. The 5th Bengal Light Cavalry is represented as having misconducted itself shamefully. It is stated, in a letter from the army, that, bodies of Sikhs making demonstrations on our left, General Thackwell directed a squadron of the 3rd Dragoons and the 5th regiment of Light Cavalry to charge them. The dragoons, led by Captain Unett, gallantly dashed through the Sikh wedge, but, being unsupported by the native regiment, had to cut their way back, with a loss of 46 killed and wounded, Captain Unett and Lieutenant Stisted being amongst the latter. The 5th Light Cavalry, long considered one of the finest regiments in the Bengal army,—some squadrons of it having formed part of the heroic garrison of Jellalabad,—strange to say, in spite of the exhortations of their officers, broke and fled in confusion.

The approach of evening put a stop to this fiercely contested conflict, perhaps the severest battle ever fought by our troops in India. The Sikhs, who are acknowledged to have displayed extraordinary bravery and skill, withdrew from the jungle in the most perfect order. The British troops bivouacked that night a little in the rear of the field of battle, and next morning a camp was formed. A cold rain came on, and lasted until the 15th, and during these two dreary days, the wounded were brought in, and the melancholy office was performed of interring the numerous dead, which is described in letters from the camp as having been a peculiarly solemn and affecting ceremony.

In summing up the results of this conflict, it is said that the loss of the Sikhs "must have been very great,"—some accounts carry it up to 4,000 men,—and that in one spot 250 dead bodies were counted. But this calculation is not quite compatible with the facts, that their troops were so covered by the jungle that our artillery were obliged to fire without seeing them; and that, although at one time from 30 to 40 of their guns were in our possession, we could only carry off 12, the rest having been recovered in the night by the enemy.

On the other hand, our loss is enormous; 26 European officers and 731 men killed; 66 officers and 1,446 men wounded; making a total of 2,269—nearly 1,000 said to be Europeans. Moreover, four of our guns fell into the hands of the enemy, and five stand of colours.

If the reports in the Indian journals (the general harmony of which is remarkable) be at all trustworthy, we have no scruple in saying that a rigid inquiry must be instituted into the circumstances which caused so fearful a sacrifice of life: it is due to the public; it is due to the army; it is due to the character of the Commander-in-Chief himself.

By the latest accounts (the 20th January), it appears that Lord Gough then occupied the same position as on the 14th; he had thrown up intrenchments, and was determined to wait reinforcements, having directed Brigadier Wheeler to join him with the forces in the Baree and Jullundur doabs (about 6,000 men), and had ordered up the 53rd regiment from Lahore, sending his crippled regiments back to Lahore and Ramnuggur. The bulk of the Mooltan force (half of the Bombay column and the whole of the Bengal troops) was directed, as soon as the citadel fell, to move up the right bank of the Jelum, upon Pind Dadun Khan, which would make Lord Gough's army 37,000 strong. The enemy had abandoned Moong, and concentrated his force at Russool (about four miles only from the Commander-in-Chief's camp), on a low range of hills, with field-works in front.

On the 19th, the Sikh general of artillery surrendered to Lord Gough, and two of the 9th Lancers, who had been taken prisoners on the 13th, arrived in the camp with a letter from Shere Singh.

The inauspicious hue of the intelligence from the Jelum has cast into unmerited shade our success at Mooltan, the rebellious Dewan Moolraj having surrendered, with his whole garrison, unconditionally, on the 22nd January, when, practicable breaches having been effected, the British troops were about to storm the citadel.

It having been found that the capture of the city had not increased the chance of our speedy possession of the fort, the spirit of the garrison being kept up by some Akalees, arrangements were made to approach it by regular parallels, and a furious hombardment and cannonade was opened against it on the 4th, and continued to be maintained till the 18th, the trenches being brought close to the walls, which seemed incapable of being breached by ordnance, and mining was resorted to. On the 18th, three mines were exploded, and the counter-scarp was blown into the ditch. A shaft was then sunk under the trench, and a gallery driven towards the wall. One battery from the town side of the fort was placed on a level considerably higher than the citadel itself; another was moved close up to the wall, and here 18 and 24pounders were employed incessantly in battering, while 8-inch howitzers discharged live shells into the wall, which buried themselves in the mud and brickwork of which it was constructed, and exploded like mines, tearing vast masses away with them. On the 19th the sap had reached the crest of the glacis. The enemy had been diligent in repairing the devastation caused by the explosions. stockading and raising breastworks of rubbish: but two practicable breaches having been effected on the 21st, the 22nd was appointed by General Whish as the day on which the fort was to be stormed. Moolraj had repeatedly offered to surrender on condition of his life being spared; the answer invariably returned was, that nothing but unconditional surrender would satisfy us. He was given until the day above named to accede to our terms, or stand by the consequences of refusal, and on the morning of that day, the troops were formed for the assault, when Moolraj lost heart, and surrendered, with the fortress and its garrison of betwixt 3,000 and 4,000 men, unconditionally.

The city of Mooltan is stated to have been confiscated to the state of Lahore by Major Edwardes, who has placed General Cortlandt in command.

The fort of Attock has at length fallen into the hands of the enemy, the Affghan garrison having thrown open the gates and admitted their countrymen, who plundered the town, and committed shameful outrages. Lieutenant Herbert is a prisoner in the hands of Chuttur Singh. Captain Abbott was unmolested in the Hazereh country on the 6th January.

The Affghans were in force betwixt Jumrood and the Indus; they had not as yet declared themselves on either side, but Dost Mahomed is said to be in close communication with Chuttur Singh, who is supposed to be on his march to join his son Shere. The fidelity of the Jamoo troops, under Colonel Steinbach, numbering 10,000 men, is reported much too doubtful to make it desirable for us to have them near us.

Some operations have taken place against the insurgents in the Baree doab, where arrangements were made on the 16th of January for attacking Ram Singh, in his strong position on a hill in front of the camp of Brigadier Wheeler, at Dalla, eight kos from Shahpoor. It was proposed that Colonel Downing should attack from the east, in two columns; that a third should storm the position from the north, or Ravee side, while two went up from the main camp, to the south-west of the hill. The two last were the only ones that came into action: one, under Major Butler, composed of 250 men of his own corps (the 3rd N.I.), and about 200 dismounted sowars of the 2nd Irregulars (Captain Jackson's), under Lieutenant Swinton; the other under Captain Davidson, of the 16th Irregulars, composed of fifty dismounted sowars of his own corps, and two companies of the 1st regiment of Sikh locals, under Lieutenant Peel. The brunt of the affair fell on the latter party, who lost many men. Captain Davidson was wounded by a matchlock ball in the right hand, and Lieut. Peel was shot through the chest, and received four sabre wounds; he died on the 17th. Of Major Butler's force, Lieut. Christie, of the 7th L.C., a volunteer, was killed, and a few men killed and wounded. Had the other columns come up, it is believed few of the insurgents could have escaped; the cause of their not doing so is not explained, as far as the 4th N.I. are concerned, but the 3rd, or Ravee column, under Lieutenant Hodson, of the guides, lost their way The loss of the enemy was not during the night. great, and they went off across the hills towards Noorpoor. Their force is known to have been under 1,000, of whom about one-half were regulars, under Ummer Singh, and formerly formed a Dogra regiment, under Dheean Singh. On the morning of the 17th a body of 500 of the party attacked a post of the 4th N.I., under Lieut. Aikman, with Ensign Elphinstone, commanding the road to Noorpoor. They were beaten off with 16 killed, the party of the 4th only losing two killed and four wounded. Captain Pattenson was sent to reinforce the post, but in the mean time Ram Singh and his men effected their escape. ollowed by Colonel Downing, with three companies, in the fhope of preventing their reaching Noorpoor before him.

Scinde was quiet; the reported invasion of the Affghans turned out to have originated in some people coming down the Kojuck Pass to raise tribute in the Seebee country, which alarmed the Khan of Kelat, who communicated his apprehensions to the authorities in Upper Scinde.

A similar panic appears to have been created at Calcutta by rumours of a threatened invasion by the Nepalese, a body of about 10,000 of their troops having approached the British frontier. But it soon appeared that this movement was in reality a royal hunting-party, upon a truly eastern scale,—the king, and his minister (Jung Bahadoor), accompanied by the British Resident (Major Thoresby) and his staff, having come down into the Taraee, the great forest at the foot of the Nepal hills, with ten or twelve regiments. The people of Tirhoot and Purneah were in great alarm; and the scizure of some guns, which were being conveyed up the country in boats concealed under grain, inspired the authorities with suspicions, and some troops were hastily collected to repel the expected descent, which would have been a serious affair, as the Lower Provinces were denuded of troops.

The other parts of British India are in perfect repose.

BENGAL.

MILITARY OPERATIONS.

ACTION ON THE JHELUM.

Notification.—Camp, Mukko, 17th January, 1849.—The Governor-General has much satisfaction in intimating to the President in Council, and notifying for public information, that he has this day received a demi-official letter from his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, in which his Excellency announces to the Governor-General, that on the afternoon of the 13th inst. the troops under his command attacked and entirely defeated the Sikh army under Rajah Shere Singh in its position near the river Jhelum.

The action was obstinately and severely contested. The enemy was in great force, and occupied very strong positions. They were driven back at every point with the loss of many of their guns, and had, by the latest intelligence, relinquished all the positions in which they had been entrenched.

The details of these operations have not yet reached the Governor-General; as soon as they are received they will be published for general information.

The Governor-General directs that a salute of twenty-one guns be fired at every principal station of the army as soon as this notification shall be received.

Not since the destruction of the garrison of Cabool has so heavy a catalogue of blunders and misfortunes been carried home from India as that which the present mail conveys. We have for the first time since 1842 to give particulars of the annihilation of half regiments from the sheer mismanagement of the commanding officer; and the retirement of British troops from the presence of the enemy under circumstances when to have remained was to have been entirely annihilated. At the date of our last, the army under the Commander-in-Chief had for a fortnight been inactive; would they had remained so, rather than have gone out to battle under one who never takes the field but mischance or needless carnage attends his banner! The whole force, amounting to carnage attends his banner! betwixt 20,000 and 24,000 men, with from 100 to guns, had closed up and was encamped midway betwixt the Chenab and the Jhelum, about eighteen miles from the camp of the enemy, who had entrenched themselves on the hither bank of the latter river, with outworks on the other side, to protect their rear, and enable them if necessary to change their position in safety. It had all along been given out that no operation of magnitude would be attempted until tidings were received of the capture of Mooltan, though it was generally understood that, so soon as Moolraj was disposed of, Shere Sing would be attacked. Lord Gough had given orders for the advance of half the Bombay column and the whole of the Bengal portion of the besieging force so soon as their object was gained. It is not quite apparent whether he meant to move so soon as these were ready to start, or to wait for their arrival-their upward march must have occupied three weeks, and the probability is, that the Com-mander-in-Chief meant to be guided by the chapter of accidents. A fortnight longer had been spent in the operations of the siege than had been looked for, and our troops were becoming impatient for employment; the enemy were waxing audacious in impunity. Col. Sir Henry Lawrence, who had reached Bombay on the 8th December, pushed up the Indus with his accustomed celerity of movement; he joined General Whish on the 27th, and remained at Mooltan till the capture of the city, on the 2nd of January. He then hastened upwards to Ferozepore, which he reached on the 6th, and was the first to convey to the Governor-General at Mukko the same evening the tidings of our first success. After a few hours with Lord Dalhousie, arranging the measures to be next pursued, he pushed on to Lahore, where he arrived on the morning of the 9th and attended the Durbar. From this he the same evening started for the camp of the Commander-in-Chief, which he reached the next night, when arrangements were immediately made to get the troops in motion. We give the events as they occurred, without having any authority to connect them together as cause and effect: they may be so or not, but they are striking as sequences. Preparations for an advance having been made on the 11th, on the 12th the troops marched out about seven in the morning from their old camp at Lussoorie, and reached a place called Dinghee, in the direction of the Jhelum, about two o'clock in the afternoon. They here encamped nearly in the same order as at Lussoorie, only that Gilbert's division, with the irregular cavalry, were in the rear. They started again next morning at seven, accompanied by all their baggage and other establishments, and marched till noon through a tolerably open country, a patch of brushwood or a few scattered trees here and there making their appearance. They were at this time within sight of the enemy, and about three miles from the front of his position. The baggage was directed to halt, while the troops formed line and advanced in order of battle. The right consisted of Pope's cavalry brigade, three troops of horse artillery, and a light field battery, and the division of infantry under Brig.-Gen. Campbell. They now came upon one of the outposts of the enemy. Ten of the heavy guns, with the horse artillery batteries, were ordered to the front; when, after a few rounds, the enemy retired, leaving their tents standing, but carrying with them everything besides. Gen. Thackwell, with three troops of horse artillery, and White's cavalry brigade, had been directed to attack them on the opposite side. The column once more advanced, moving over the ground just before occupied by the enemy. The Sikh army lay extended from Moong to Russool stretching a mile from north-east to south-west, some distance from the Jhelum, which covered their rear, and over which a well-constructed bridge had been thrown. Their magazines were at Russool, where the spur extending from the mountains terminated, and near to which there was a narrow pass, or gorge, well suited for a safe and easy retreat in case of reverse befalling them. Their flanks being both admirably secured, their centre was protected by field-works, which again were covered by jungly and uneven ground. The original intention of the Commander-in-Chief had been to direct all his strength against Russool, when not only would their position have been turned, but their stores sacrificed and their retreat in this direction cut off. It was now past one o'clock, and the troops had been for six hours under arms without rest or refreshment, and it was resolved to encamp for the night, as it was clearly impossible to attack the enemy with advantage or drive him from his position before dark. While the colourmen were marking out the camp, which was, it seems, to have been pitched within range of the enemy's batteries, a fire of artillery vas opened, and some shot fell near the Commander-in-Chief. He now all at once, and without the slightest consultation with any one, changed his plan entirely, and determined to leave Russool, and to endeavour to penetrate the centre of the enemy's position near Moong. Without knowing of the nature of the ground, or the position or strength of the enemy, and in the knowledge that it would be impossible before dark to force his entrenchments or compel him to retire, and before any arrangement for concerted action or mutual support could be made, at two o'clock in the afternoon the order was given for a general attack under his own immediate directions. A cannonade, which is said to have lasted from one to two hours, was first opened, but so well protected were the guns of the enemy which replied to ours, that we had scarcely anything but the smoke and flash to guide the direction of our fire. The division under Campbell, in making a flank movement, exposed their own flank to a murderous cross fire from the Sikh batteries. The infantry were supported on the right and left by cavalry under White and Popethe intervals were occupied by artillery. gan's brigade carried everything before it, storming the batteries and spiking the guns of the enemy. The brigade of Pennycuick, of H. M. 24th, and the 25th and 45th N.I., had been pushed considerably shead, and were unsupported by artillery. They suffered tremendously as they pushed on, and were at length ordered to charge up hill against a battery of the enemy. The acclivity was steep, and the distance long; and before they reached the summit they were blown and exhausted. They nevertheless stormed the battery at the bayonet's point, and were busy spiking the guns when a regiment of Seikh infantry, hid in the jungle close by, opened so terrific a fire upon them that they were comwho had gone into action H.M. 24th had lost 460, of whom nearly one half were slain—the brigadier commanding, the lieut. colonel, the major, four captains, and seven subalterns were left dead-ten were disabled, twenty-four officers in all belonging to a gallant corps having been rendered unserviceable-a casualty list long without precedent in our wars. The native regiments suffered but little less severely. As soon as the brigades just named were found to be engaged, the brigade under Col. Mountain was sent against what was understood to be the enemy's centre. They pushed on fearlessly through a brushwood jungle in the face of a storm of round shot, grape, and musketry, which swept them away by dozens. They stormed and spiked a battery of the Sikh guns, when they found the enemy's infantry close upon them on every side, pouring in volleys of musketry in front, rear, and flank : so, being isolated and unsupported, they were compelled to retire. Sir W. Gilbert and Brigadier Godby had meanwhile now proceeded from the extreme right of the infantry line. They pushed their way through dense jungles till they reached the Sikh infantry, when they found themselves outflanked to the right and left by masses of the enemy,—a murderous fire of musketry having been opened on them from every side. They gallantly charged, but finding all their exertions in vain, they were compelled to retire, when Dawes's battery came to their rescue. The enemy were now attacked and beaten, and several of their guns taken and spiked. On the left, the enemy were pushing forward boldly and successfully, when a squadron of the 3rd dragoons and the 5th Light Cavalry were ordered by Thackwell to charge them. On approaching the foe, the native cavalry broke and fled; the dragoons, unsupported as they were, charged through the Sikhs, and were for a time lost sight of. It was feared they must have fallen into an ambush and been annihilated, and terrible was the anxiety and suspense; when they quickly re-appeared in rear of the enemy, and were seen gallantly cutting their way back. Captain Unett, the heroic officer who led them, was severely wounded,-Lieut. Stisted slightly; and forty-six men were found to have been killed and wounded in the charge. The 5th cavalry, said to have thus forgotten themselves, have for long been considered one of the finest regiments in the Bengal army: a portion of them distinguished themselves at Cabool; another portion formed a part of the heroic garrison at Jellalabad. On the right, the cavalry, under Brig. Pope, consisting of H.M.'s 9th lancers, the 14th dragoons, and the 1st and 6th light cavalry, got entangled amongst the jungle, and exposed to a terrific fire from the enemy. Seeing a battery, which it was impossible to charge with any hope of success, being opened against them, Pope gave the order to retire, when the retreat seems to have become something like a flight; the cavalry getting into disorder, and becoming jammed amongst the horse artillery amongst whom they fell back. The guns were compelled to suspend their fire, as the retiring corps were for a time between them and the enemy: the tumbrils were upset, the gunners ridden down, so that there was no time to limber up and retire, when the enemy were upon them, and six of them were captured,—two were after-wards recovered. Major Christie, who commanded the artillery, was here mortally wounded. Lieut. Manson was killed on the spot, Lieut. Dundas was wounded, and Capt. Huish only escaped by Major Steuart, of the 14th Dragoon, shooting a Sikh who had his sword raised to cut him dowr. Major Ekins, dep. adj.-gen., was killed while endeavouring to rally the retreating corps. The cavalry and horse artillery pushed their way through the jungle on the left till warned by a caunonade of their vicinage to the enemy. The guns under Col. Brind returned the fire so warmly, as speedily to silence their opponents. But there was no infantry to support them, and their success was of no avail: they were compelled to withdraw, for fear of being surrounded. Darkness at length separated the combatants. Our troops were withdrawn from the jungle, and bivouacked for the night under arms,—the troopers sleeping by their horses, the artillerymen by their guns. The night was cutting cold, with a chilling drizzling rain. When morning broke, we first became aware of how small had been our advantage—how fearful had been the sacrifice at which it had been won. We had captured twelve guns and lost four.

The Sikhs meanwhile had withdrawn in the most perfect order. The guns which had been spiked by us were carried off by them : the enemy in search for trophies having murdered all the wounded men they met with, and stripped and mutilated the dead! Our loss had amounted to no less than 2,300 killed and wounded, of whom nearly 800 were slain. Twenty-six officers were killed on the spot, or died of their wounds, -sixty-six were wounded. Her Majesty's 24th, and the 30th and 56th N.I., were so entirely disabled that they were compelled to be disjoined from the force and sent back to Ramnugger and Lahore, troops from these stations moving up to take their place. H.M.'s 24th and the 56th N.I. lost both their colours, the 25th and 30th N.I. lost each one: the 5th cavalry lost the colour they won on the field of Maharajpore. The 70th N.I. captured one of the enemy's standards. Thus terminated the disastrous day at Mojnawalla,which, under the name of victory, has filled more hearts with shame and grief than any day since the destruction of the garrison of Cabool in the Tezeen Pass in January, 1842. The Sikhs were now able to carry out all their plans, while in every one of ours we were foiled. successfully retired from Moong to the quarter on which they are now encamped, that the parties who went in quest of the wounded next day could scarcely discover their position. They now took up their quarters on the heights of Russool, watching the movements of Lord Gough's army at the distance of five miles, and in daily hopes of receiving an accession to their strength. Chuttur Singh had not as yet joined them. Some 10,000 Affghans were to The 10,000 Sikh the north of them, watching the turn of events. troops sent by Gholab Singh, under Colonel Steinbach, to co-operate with us, were only waiting to see on which side victory should declare itself to attach themselves to the winning cause. The Commander-in-Chief seemed to have been at first utterly at a loss what was to be done: at first, an immediate retreat on Dinghee was spoken of, but as this would have been too unmistakeable an acknowledgment of unsuccess, he resolved at length to entrench an acknowledgment of unsuccess, he resolved at length to enterior himself where he was, calling up Wheeler's brigade, of about 6,000 men, engaged in quelling disturbances in the Baree Doab, and summoning the 13th and 22nd from Ramnuggur, and H.M.'s 53rd from Lahore; sending back, in exchange, the regiments that were disabled. Lord Gough, having ordered that no letters should be sent from camp until the despatches were in readiness, wrote a brief notification to the Governor-General, stating that the troops under Shere Singh had been entirely defeated and driven back at every point, with the loss of many of their guns, and had relin-quished all the positions in which they had been entrenched. The ruse was of no avail. For three days silence was successfully maintained, when such a host of letters from officers with the force appeared in all the newspapers, bearing so obviously the stamp of the highest authority, that the despacthes, when they do arrive, will take a very secondary place in the rank of documents. The baggage-cattle had been under their burdens for more than thirty hours before sufficient leisure was found to attend to them. On the 17th, two European lancers who had been taken prisoners, were returned to us, and the Sikh general of artillery, with his two sons, and a couple of other men of note, are said to have surrendered on the 19th. Lord Gifford and Sir H. Lawrence quitted the camp of Lord Gough for that of the Governor-General, on the 18th. A field-work had been thrown up on the right. Major Tucker was to succeed Major Ekins. Col. Carnegy had reached camp, and been appointed brigadier in Penny. cuick's room. Chuttur Singh had not up to the 20th, our latest date from camp, joined his son, though daily expected. The weather was delightful, and the spirits of the troops are said to have greatly revived. The wounded were doing well. The Sikhs are said to have lost 3,000 men killed, and 4,000 wounded, —our casualties being rather more than a third of this. The enemy were busily engaged entrenching themselves; they are reported to be 60,000 strong.

Another of those murderous conflicts, which have rendered our hostilities with the Sikhs so conspicuous, has occurred on the left bank of the river Jhelum, near, or as some say, on, the identical spot which, two thousand years ago, formed the battle-field of Alexander and Porus. That scene, rich in classic associations, has been the arena of a fierce and protracted struggle between the army of the Punjab, under Lord Gough, and the Sikh forces under Rajah Shere Singh—a struggle in which the British have had to deplore the loss of at least ninety-three officers and 2,500 men killed and wounded, four guns captured, and four or five regimental colours taken by the enemy—a struggle which terminated in victory, but which was disgraced by the flight of a Bengal cavalry regiment, and the retreat—as yet scarce satisfactorily explained—of two British corps of dragoons; a struggle, finally, which left both the contending hosts so weak and shattered that it was doubtful which had sustained the greater injury from the conflict, and which had so few of the badges of triumph for the victors, that their opponents took up a new position, and fired a salute in honour of its termination. Though masters of the field, salute in honour of its termination. Though masters of the field, our laurels are drenched with blood, and it is the universal opinion that two more such victories would be virtual ruin.

At the date of our last summary Lord Gough, with his army was encamped at Janiki, waiting in the expectation of hearing of the fall or surrender of Mooltan, the receipt of which tidings, it was generally believed, would be the signal for an onward movement. The siege operations, however, proceeding more slowly than was anticipated, and circumstances appearing to render further delay unadvisable, the Commander-in-Chief seems to have altered his intention and to have determined on attacking Shere Singh's position before obtaining news of the success of General Whish. It has been stated that the long inaction of his lordship's army was beginning to exercise a prejudicial influence on the minds of the natives in the Jetch Doab, and also that it was expected Chutter Singh would shortly join his son with a strong force, so that it became important—if fighting was the resolve—to fight without delay. However this may be, the British troops moved from their position on the 9th of January, and took up new ground at a place called Luscoree, about five miles to the right, and two miles to the front, of their former camp. Having been joined on the 11th by Brigadier Penny, with the 6th brigade of infantry, and having, on the same day, undergone an inspection by the Commander-in-Chief, the whole force moved, on the morning of the 12th, from Lascoree to Dinghee. Next morning orders were issued for a further advance, which, it was clear, must bring our troops in contact with the enemy, whose general disposition had been ascertained by a reconnoissance undertaken after the formation of the camp. A communication, dated Camp Chilleanwala, the 14th, says:—

"The army marched yesterday at half-past 7 o'clock in order of battle, in the following order from the right. The 2nd brigade of cavalry, with the 14th light dragoons temporarily attached; Lane's, Christie's, and Huish's troops of horse artillery; the 3rd brigade of infantry (except 45th N.I.); No. 17 light field battery; the 4th brigade of infantry; the heavy guns, Shakespear's battery; the 5th brigade of infantry, with the 45th N.I. temporarily attached, in lieu of the 22nd N.I. at Ramnuggur, I believe; No. 5 light field battery; the 7th brigade of infantry; No. 10 light field battery; Fordyce's, Duncan's and Warner's troops of horse artillery, the 1st brigade of cavalry (except the 14th dragoons). The troops were drawn up in columns of brigades with intervals of 100 yards. The 6th brigade of infantry (except 20th N.I.) was in reserve, 200 yards in rear of the heavy guns. The corps of the right wing were drawn up left in front, those of the left wing right in front. Each corps supplied its own advance guard, and all paraded as strong as possible, guards joining their regiments. The baggage moved in rear of brigades respectively, the artillery and engineer parks, the field hospital stores, &c. in rear of the heavy guns. The rear guard was composed of the 4th brigade of cavalry (3rd and 9th irregulars) and the 2nd brigade of infantry, with three guns. In this order the army moved about three miles to the north-west across the country, which was pretty well furnished with scattered bushes, passing a village, and Burra Umra, to Chota Umra. Here a halt of an hour took place, and the baggage was ordered to remain at this village for the present. From this spot could be seen part of the Sikh camp near Russoolpoor, about three or four miles in front, on a low wooded ridge. At ten o'clock the army advanced again, and moved for an hour, passing over perhaps about three miles of ground, taking a more westerly direction than before, and leaving the ridge just mentioned on the right hand."

We now proceed to lay before our readers the connected account of the battle compiled by the Delhi Gazette from the letters of its correspondents. To this some additional particulars must be appended:—

"About eleven A.M. the force came upon one of the outposts of the enemy, and were fired upon from a slight eminence ('low bare hill') above the rest of the jungle, which, though there in dense small patches, admitted of an easy passage between the The heavy guns (ten in number we believe), with three horse batteries, were ordered to the front to clear the ground, an operation that did not take more than five or ten minutes, the enemy retreating with their guns, but leaving their tents standing. The column again advanced, and marched over the ground on which the Sikh picquet had been posted; but instead of continuing the march in the direction of Russool, as originally intended and arranged, the Commander-in-Chief suddenly changed the plan of operations, brought up the right, and deployed his infantry line in front generally of the position at Moong, thus showing the Sikhs that their strong post at Russool was no longer threatened. No enemy being at the time in sight, though their camp was in full view, and distant only between two or three miles on a rising ground with the jungle between, the order was given for the marking out of the British camp for the day, and the colour-men were actually engaged in this duty, when about 2 p. m. a round shot or two from the enemy, which flew over the line of demarcation of the camp, fell close to the Commander-in-Chief, showing that the place was by no means eligible for a halt. Observing this, Lord Gough determined at once on attacking, without, however, having taken the previous usual and necessary precaution of ascertaining by reconnoissance in that direction where the strength of the enemy actually lay, and without making the smallest preliminary arrangements for the advance. After a cannonade, which is variously estimated to have lasted between one and two hours, the left, or Brigadier-General Campbell's division, were directed to make a flank movement, and in obeying the order exposed their own flank to a dreadful cross fire from Sikh batteries on their left, which had not been observed, and on the 3rd and 4th brigades—the latter being considerably in advance on the occasion-ultimately reaching the guns, they were met by such a tremendous fire that they were obliged to retire with a loss, in H.M.'s 24th foot, more severe than any it has ever fallen to the lot of a regiment in India to suffer in the field (we do not of course include the Kabul massacre). As soon as it was known that these two brigades were engaged, the 5th was sent against the centre of what was supposed to be the enemy's line and advanced, under their gallant leader Brigadier Mountain, in the most undaunted manner, through the jungle in the face of a fire (a storm), first of round shot, then grape, and lastly musketry, which mowed down the officers and men by dozens. Still they advanced, and on reaching the guns spiked every one in front, and two others on the left, which had subsequently opened a flank fire on them; but the Sikhs no sooner saw they were deprived of the use of their guns, than they renewed such a fire with musketry, not only on the flank, but in the rear, of the brigade, that common prudence dictated a retreat, and it was effected with the same determination that had distinguished the three brigades on the left throughout. The conduct of the European and Native infantry, who were it appears not supported as they should have been, by artillery or cavalry, for want of due and proper arrangements, was, to use the emphatic word of several correspondents, 'magnificent.' The loss of the several regiments engaged—H.M.'s 24th, 29th, and 61st foot; the 25th, 30th, 46th, and 56th regiments of N. I. will show how they fought. In the meantime Brigadier Godby, with Major-General Sir W. Gilbert as a leader, who was on the extreme right of the infantry line, moved forward, and, after marching through dense jungle for some minutes, came upon the enemy's infantry; the brigade opened their fire, but the enemy were in such numbers that they easily outflanked them. Two companies of the 2nd European regiment were wheeled up, showed front, and the whole charged, but had not gone far when they found they were surrounded. They immediately faced right about, kept up some file-firing, and charged, rear rank in front. At this juncture Dawes's battery came to the rescue, and having beaten off the enemy, their guns were taken. While the infantry were thus highly distinguishing themselves and earning imperishable laurels, the cavalry on the extreme left, under Brigadier White, had made a dashing charge and contributed much to the defeat of the enemy, while the cavalry on the extreme right, consisting of Brigadier Pope's force, with the 14th light dragoons, temporarily attached, having been taken in advance of their horse artillery (Lane's, Christie's and Huish's troops), were directed to charge a body of the enemy's cavalry, variously estimated at from 1,000 to 5,000. Instead of obeying the orders given them, they faced about, and, in spite of the energetic endeavours of their own and other officers, left the field (with the exception of a body of the 9th lancers, who were rallied), and made direct for the artillery; on coming up to which, instead of pulling up, they dashed through Huish's and Christie's troops, upsetting a waggon and some horses, and directing their course to the field hospital. The enemy, seeing the advantage they had thus unac-countably insured, followed our cavalry, got amongst the horse artillery, cut down no less than seventy-three gunners, who had, by the flight of the cavalry through their ranks, being deprived of the means of defending themselves, and carried off six of the guns, two of which were subsequently recovered, and would have done much more harm had not Col. Lane been fortunately enabled to draw his troop out of the mélée, and pour in grape so energetically that the Goorchurras thought they had done enough and fled. When the whole was over, the Commanderin-Chief rode in among the troops and was received with every demonstration of joy. The fight was certainly as severe a one as demonstration of joy. The fight was certainly as severe a one as has ever been fought in India, not excepting Ferozeshah, the enemy having such great advantages in the jungle, which they were thoroughly acquainted with, and in their very superior numbers, notwithstanding which they were undoubtedly beaten from their positions at Moong, and would, had there been time to withdraw them from the jungle after the retreat of the enemy, have lost above one-half of their guns; night unfortunately supervened, and the Sikhs were enabled to recover many of their guns, from which it was subsequently ascertained they had been successful in extracting the spikes. The loss of the Sikhs must have been very great, as in one snot The loss of the Sikhs must have been very great, as in one spot above 250 dead bodies were counted. In their night excursion to recover their guns, they killed many of our wounded, and stripped and plundered all the bodies within their reach."

It is stated that in the opening cannonade the Sikhs were so effectually concealed behind the thick jungle that the only guide to the British artillery-men in taking aim was the smoke of the enemy's guns. The dreadful slaughter in H.M.'s 24th regiment is attributed in some measure to the exhausted state in which the men reached the battery against which they were sent. Almost as soon as they had got to the Sikh guns, and commenced spiking them, a regiment of the enemy's infantry suddenly opened a wolley on them. The 24th then, with their native companions of the 22nd and 25th Bengal N.I. (forming Pennycuick's brigade) commenced a retreat, and great havoe was made amongst them, the brigadier falling along with many of his men. Thirteen officers of the 24th were killed and wounded, and some 500 men of the same regiment likewise bit the dust. An excuse has been put forth for the flight of the 14th dragoons: it is said they mistook an order given to them to move to the right or left for an order to retire. The horse artillery have called for a court of inquiry, and it is to be hoped the painful question may be cleared up; at the same time, the precipitate and disastrous retreat of such a regiment cannot be looked upon otherwise than with seelings of the most profound regret. Brigadier Pope, who gave the order, is now no more. The conduct of the 5th Bengal light cavalry is scarcely likely to meet with an apologist. A writer with the force says:—

"Brigadier White 'protected the left of the infantry, Col. Brind's guns being posted between White and Campbell's division. Bodies of Sikh cavalry made demonstrations on our left. Gen. Thackwell directed a squadron of the 3rd dragoons and 5th light cavalry to charge them. The dragoons willingly obeyed the order, and under their gallant leader, Capt. Unett, dashed through the Sikh wedge, and cut their way back. The 5th cavalry, in spite of their officers, came back in confusion, and intense was our anxiety about the fate of the 3rd squadron. At length they emerged covered with glory! Two officers of this squadron were wounded, the gallant Unett and Stisted, and the loss among the men amounted to 46 killed and wounded. Such gallantry deserves to be handed down to distant posterity."

During the night of the 13th the British force bivouacked a little in rear of the battlefield. Next morning their camp was formed. Rain now came on and lasted without intermission till the evening of the 15th, adding to the gloom of the scene, and exercising any thing but a comforting influence on the spirits of our troops. During these two wet and dreary days the wounded were brought in and the dead interred; the latter is said to have been a peculiarly solemn and affecting ceremony. By the last accounts Lord Gough continued to occupy the same position, though it was an unfavourable place for supplies, as well as in other respects. The enemy were seen encamped at Russool (they had abandoned Moong), on a low range of hills, on the right flank and to the front of the British force. The river was behind the hills, and the Sikhs had a bridge over it.

The Commander-in-Chief had thrown up slight intrenchments to protect weak points. The force having been so terribly crippled by the action of the 13th, his lordship had deemed it expedient to direct Brigadier Wheeler's force to join him, as well as to order up the 53rd regiment from Lahore. It was not thought there would be any renewal of hostilities until reinforcements arrived for Lord Gough's army. A letter of the 19th contains the following:—

"I hasten to tell you that the great Sikh general of artillery, Elahu Box, sent a messenger into our camp this morning to say that he wished to surrender himself to Lord Gough, and about half an hour ago the general himself came in. This is good, is it not?"

"Two of the 9th lancers who were taken prisoners by the Sikhs have to-day been sent back to us with a letter from the Shere to Lord Gough, saying that he was not the aggressor in the present war. Lord Gough returned a letter of thanks to the Shere for his kind treatment of the prisoners, and here the matter ends."—Bombay Telegraph, Feb. 3.

Lord Gough's generalship in attacking the Sikhs so late in the day, with such precipitation—and in a manner so disorderly, has been very severely censured by the press. An up-country correspondent gives the following brief but graphic description of the way in which the affair was brought about:—"As I have received no less than three letters from camp, and as they all contain the same account of the 'Tipperary tactics,' I have taken up mypen to write a few lines to you, as you may not hear the particulars. The old chief had merely given an order to change ground, and it was not his intention to have attacked the Sikhs until the next day, but they seem to have enticed him on; they allowed their advanced posts to be driven in, and then opened a heavy fire, which put him into a passion, and he swore he would drive the Sakes from the face of the earth! Several people advised him not to fight them until the next day, but he would listen to no one, and even said he would put any officer under arrest who presumed to suggest anything to him! So at it they went—every general and brigadier his own way, receiving no orders—the same as you might suppose the Sikhs doing."—Ibid.

We give the following letters from one of our correspondents in the Punjab. They supply a few interesting particulars not to be found in other accounts, and also afford a fair indication of the tone which pervades private communications in reference to our recent proceedings in the Punjab.

" 19th January, 1849.

"I have much pleasure in giving you the following latest in-formation from the Commander-in-Chief's camp, dated 16th inst.; it indeed has been a sad business, and it is impossible to predict when our mishaps, and such fearful butchery and wanton sacrifice of lives will end or stop under such an incompetent Commander-in-Chief. Unless the Governor-General recalls Lord Gough to the provinces, the chances are he will not only lose the splendid army under his command (which he has already done his best to cripple and weaken), but he will so compromise the Government, that the most serious apprehension may be entertained as to the ultimate result of this contest.

"I told you Goolab Sing had an army of 10,000 men not far in advance of the Commander-in-Chief's camp, doing nothing, but alive and awake to take every advantage of the first serious mishap that may occur to our army, under its present chief—in addition to which Dost Mahomed has a force of ten or 12,000 Affghans, at a short distance from Attock, ready to co-operate with Chuttur Singh. Goolab Sing has fourteen pieces of cannon with his 10,000 men, but he is not present in person: the wary chief is abiding his time in the hills; he has, however, deputed a vakeel to offer a nuzzur at Lahore to our resident, but deep craftiness and the most wily treachery are at the bottom of this proceeding. The vakeel has been instructed to apprize his master of every single occurrence that takes place at Lahore, and to keep him well informed of all movements on our part. It is extremely strange our Government will not believe in the treacherous intentions of Goolab Singh.

"There are from thirty to forty thousand men, in arms, leagued against our power and supremacy north of the Jhelum-with a park of artillery, varying, according to reports, from fifty to seventy guns.

"In a letter from Lahore, of yesterday's date, which reached me this morning, it is stated that the Commander-in-Chief has ordered Brig. gen. Wheeler's force to join him, but of course, I suppose, not until after the general has taken Ram Singh: this proceeding has been rendered necessary and urgent, in consequence of H.M.'s 24th, the 30th, and 56th regts. N.I. having been rendered next to useless! Sir Dudley Hill's reserve force of 8,500 men, will have to be brought into active service yet, as troops are required, not to proceed against and be the aggressors of the enemy, but to act on the defensive and hold our active, braye, and courageous foe in check, until General Whish's force joins, to enable the whole army to advance to Peshawur.

" Our Government appear now to be so afraid of the issue of our contest with the Sikhs (as they have neither troops sufficient to conquer them and hold the country, or money to pay the enormous expenses of this prolonged campaign) that I should not be at all surprised, they will do their utmost to patch up a peace, which will, to say the least, be not only humiliating to our arms, but disgraceful to British feelings! I am perfectly certain, however, that the Sikhs will entertain no terms with us except they are based on our quitting the Punjab and retiring across the Sutlej: this is a sine qud non with them. The same letter from Lahore mentions. 'You have no doubt heard of the late awful butchery of human life; as usual, the troops advanced without order, or any arrangement. The 14th dragoons led the advance, and on the Gorchurrahs advancing, the brigade of cavalry, it is said, retreated, afraid apparently of being led into another trap, like the Ramnuggur one! The cavalry brigade overthrew the artillery, and galloping right through them, was the cause of our loss of six guns! two of which however, were since retaken. Brigadier Pope was mortally wounded (since dead) and the cavalry were only brought up by the doolies at the General Hospital! Of the 24th foot, four field officers, case captain, and seven subalterns were killed, together with 400 men. The 30th, the 36th, and 56th regiments behaved well, but lost so many officers killed and wounded, that they must be sent back, and some other corps sent to supply their place. There were twenty-four officers buried the day after the fight, and many more since. The chief was strongly advised to defer the engagement until next day, but it was no use. Two shot fell near him, and he ordered an immediate attack, left his position, and joined the mélée, and was not to be found any where to give directions. A more undisciplined attack, or less tactics, was never heard of; he swears that the first officer who presumes to give advice, be will put him in close arrest. Poor Ekins was killed in endeavouring to rally the 14th dragoons. The artillery have demanded a Court of Inquiry, but I suppose the business will be hushed up, as it was in the 62nd foot.

A second letter, dated Lahore, 18th instant, gives the following extract of a letter from Camp:—"Chilliawallah," 16th January. of On the 12th we marched to Dingee, on the 13th we marched again, and at 11 A.M. came upon one of the enemy's outposts. The 3rd light field batteries, and heavy guns were brought to the front to drive them in, which they did in about five minutes. The infantry was then brought up, and each regiment deployed The Commander-in-Chief meant to have encamped here, and sent for quartermasters of corps to mark the ground. The enemy, however, about 2 o'clock, fired a few shots, which came in beyond our flags; and the Commander-in-Chief resolved to attack them at once. The whole line then advanced—getting into thicker and thicker jungul every minute—all this time our heavy guns which were in the centre, opened their fire, and were answered by every one of the enemy's about sixty in number. It would be impossible to describe the action. There was no plan of attack. The three light field batteries were at one time close to the enemy without any support near them. These were, at last, ordered to advance at a gallop to support Hoggan's Brigade, and the 46th regt. N.I. assured the officers of these light field batteries, that their fire alone saved them. The action lasted until dark. At four o'clock in the afternoon, we were completely surrounded by the enemy, and our artillery firing at the same time, to the front, to the rear, and to the flank! Our loss has been tremendous: 1,900 killed and wounded; we have taken twelve guns, and lost six (two of which have been recovered), the loss of our guns was owing to the cowardice of -(you will hardly believe it) ran away from a party of the enemy's cavalry, right through Christie's and Huish's troops H. A., knocking over one of Christie's waggons, horses and all! They were so crowded among the guns that the gunners could not unlimber. The result was that the enemy's cavalry got among our guns and cut our men down, right and left. The ——never drew rein until they got right through the general hospital in the rear, knocking over the doolies and every thing that came in their way. What caused this panic no one knows."

Of the above 1.900 killed and wounded, 950 are Europeans! Above thirty-six officers have been buried!

Her Majesty's 24th foot lost their regimental colour.

The 25th regiment N.I. lost a colour.

The 30th regiment N.I. lost a colour—some say two colours! The 56th regiment N.I. lost the standard they took at Gwalior!

H.M.'s 24th foot lost thirteen officers killed, including every one in the list above the junior captain! The enemy are now encamped at Russool, four miles only from the Commander-in-Chief's camp! A third letter I have just seen states that Major Loftie of the 30th N.I. was not killed, but only wounded, and that Major Bamfield, commanding the 56th regt. N.I. was killed. In the 2nd Europeans, which behaved nobly, one officer was severely wounded, Lieut. Nightingale. A fourth letter, I have now by me, dated, Camp, 15th January, states, "I dare say you will have heard of the battle fought by our army on the 13th instant, it commenced about 1 P.M. and lasted till after dark, it was a devil of a battle (the writer is a doctor), and many hard knocks and wounds, as the casualty list will show. The Sikhs fought with the greatest gallantry, and as for our men and infantry generally, they were quite heroes. The 2nd Europeans displayed great bravery, they advanced to the charge and drove the Sikhs back at the point of the bayonet, and after this, found another body of Sikhs, a regularly organized battalion, armed and dressed like our troops, in their rear. There were also some of the enemy on the right flank. This regiment had to right about face and charge to the rear, which they did, killing and wounding a great many of the Sikhs, and took and spiked four of their guns. Nightingale was wounded when about to do this, and Gaynor, who did it, had a most narrow escape. The former is the only wounded officer in that regiment severely, but I trust not dangerously, the ball having passed out and coming round the head, but the bone is fractured. One or two officers had great escapes. The 2nd Europeans had but fifty men wounded and five killed. The cases of the former, some of them very severe, and mostly in the body and legs. There has been a fearful mortality in the 24th foot, thirteen officers killed and eight wounded !- while the men said to be killed and wounded amount to 450! The 29th foot also suffered much, and artillery a good deal: all our wounded are doing well, I rejoice to say. The doctors were at one time quite within range of the enemy's shot, and a bheestie of the 2nd European regiment had his arm knocked off just behind where the surgeons of that corps were riding—a spent ball rolled under my horse's feet. Lieut. Weston and Godby, of the 36th N.I. were wounded, but not severely. Brig. Pennycuick and his son, both killed. I believe we have gained a regular victory, though at first it was doubtful. I hear Pope's brigade of cavalry got a kind of panic at one time, and came to the rear, but afterwards moved up in good style; there was something wrong with the —— for they drove us in from the rear and dispersed all the doctors, &c. at the field hospital, where I had just arrived to see if any assistance was required: there was an alarm of the Sikhs being in our rear, and then there was a regular bolt.' Such a night we all passed is better imagined than described, it was so very cold and rainy, with a high wind blowing, enough to cut one in two. Several doolies were captured by the enemy, and the band instruments of the 2nd Europeans missing."

His lordship fancied himself at Donnybrook Fair, and was in the thick of it, in the mélée, and lost to sight!

P. S.—The 56th regiment, N.I. was brought out of action with 300 men, under the command of its junior Captain, a cadet of 1840!

"20th January, 1849.

"A letter from Lord Gough's camp, received this morning, states that in the action of the 13th instant, we lost some seventy or eighty officers killed and wounded, as well as 2,400 men, put hors de combat, - while we only captured twelve of the enemy's guns, none larger than a 9-pounder, losing six of our own H. A. guns! Brigadier Campbell was wounded, but not severely, in the right arm. Many of our officers had most narrow escapes. Bagshaw, of the 46th N.I. lost an arm, while Connolly, the junior ensign, had one ball, which grazed his trowsers at the ancle; -a second ball, aimed at his head, was diverted therefrom by a sepoy's musket, which fortunately received the shot, and turned it off, breaking the musket; and this same officer was nearly shot, for the third time, by a Sikh, in a bush, who was supposed to be dead, but rose up and took aim at the officer, as he passed with his men. The fellow was, however, bayoneted quickly. Godby, of the 36th N.I. was cut down at the head of his company, I hear by a Sikh horseman. In entering the jungle, several of our officers and European troops fell by the murderous aim of the enemy, who were lying concealed among the bushes, and in most cases supposed to be dead! It was remarked that the enemy scarcely condescended to touch the sepoys, their sole aim and object being to kill the English officers and European troops. The Sikhs do not hesitate to say they despise the sepoys, who would not hold the Punjaub for an hour, were they not supported so strongly by the Europeans.

"The Calcutta papers said, a few weeks ago, that Sir John Littler had observed there would be no fighting in the Punjaub! If Sir John really said so, which I much doubt, he was a false prophet. Witness Ramnuggur, as also the fight near Russool on the 13th; again, Ram Singh's rebellion near Noorpore. Not fight indeed! Look at the returns of our killed and wounded.

That is a sufficient reply.

" I hear that Col. Sir H. Lawrence was expected at Lahore from the Commander-in-Chief's camp on the 19th instant, probably with the view of relieving Sir F. Currie, and enabling the latter to resume his seat in council. Sir H. Lawrence is most anxious to obtain the release of his brother from the grasp of Shere Singh, and dreads lest the Sikh chieftain should make him over to the tender mercies of Dost Mahomed. Report says Sir Henry is empowered to make a treaty with the Dost, at any sacrifice almost, so as to obtain his aid and assistance in putting down this wide-spread rebellion, which our Government alone now feels itself quite unable to suppress. I hear the Governor-General is in favour of annexing the Punjaub only as far as Attock, and that he would rather not have Peshawur; and that if terms could be made with Dost Mahomed, and the latter would assist us in fighting and putting down the armies of Chuttur and Shere Singh, Peshawur would be made over to the old ameer by treaty. Only fancy such an arrangement! To what a miserable shift is this Government reduced, to be compelled to sue and to beg military assistance from the Dost—a prince whose territories we made war in, and whom we made a state prisoner and deprived for a time of his kingdom! I now hear that Government will resort to any shift rather than increase the army. They are prepared to lose regiment after regiment under the Commander-in-Chief, rather than swerve from the one line of policy which they are resolved to act upon, and which is on no account to increase the number of native regiments in the Bengal army.

"It is a fact—however strange it may be—that we always lose the more troops the more the politicals are employed. In this last dreadful and horrible slaughter, the Commander-in-Chief's camp was alive with politicals, and yet their information was so scanty and so wretched that they quietly allowed our brave troops to be marched up to within one mile of the enemy's position, the ignorance of whose whereabout led to such a sanguinary sacrifice of our European troops.

"It must not be forgotten that, should our Government suc ceed in making a treaty with the Dost, and agree to make over Peshawur to him and his heirs for ever, it will be the means of bringing an intriguing and undesirable people to our confines. I allude to the Russians, two of whom, if not more, are known to be at Cabool; and, should the Dost's territories extend to Attock, why we shall have a host of Russian spies at our doors, in the character of travellers or merchants, intriguing, and scheming, and planning insurrections on the part of our own subjects. The way to Attock will be rendered easy viá Bombay and the Indus, as well as viá Musheed and Cabool, for the Russians have steamers running twice a-week from Odessa to Constantinople, whence Egyptian steamers ply to Alexandria twice a-month. Again, the Russians have steamers on the Caspian. Is it politic on our part to give over Peshawur (which is considered the key of the Pau-jaub) to the Dost, as a stepping-stone to the Russians in India?

"No less than three of the native regiments engaged in the action of the 13th have been greatly weakened both in men and officers. I have heard several commandants of corps assert that a native regiment with only 640 bayonets, or eight companies of eighty men each, with two European officers per company, in addition to the staff, would be far more efficient than the present system of 1,000 bayonets and about ten officers present. How can some officers (they are only feather-bed ones) assert that a native corps only requires a commandant and an adjutant?

"I hear the army in the field is loud in its anathemas against Lord Gough, for having the troops butchered in the merciless manner he does.

"Here is an extract from a letter, dated Camp Chilliawallah, 16th January :-- On the morning of the 13th, we moved towards the enemy's position in front of Russool, Moong being somewhat in rear of their position. The 2nd brigade of cavaly, and the 14th dragoons were on the right. When near Chilliswallah, we came upon a small advanced party of the enemy, on a rising ground. A spy told us that Sooruj Singh Majeeteea held that post, with seven regiments of 1,000 mean each, eleven guns, and two mortars, and that it was the only place along their whole line which they had entrenched. Next on his right was Sirdah Ball Singh, with five regiments and three or four guns. Then Sirdar Ram Singh; then Prithee Singh (Kama Kutch-wala); then Aotar Singh; and on the right of all, Shere Singh. The firing to the left, where Pennycuiek's brigade was, became very heavy; and we heard the shouts of the Europeans. The 24th Queen's, and 25th and 46th regiments N.I. were ulti-The Sikhs fought like mately driven back with immense loss. very devils, and fell in heaps before the 61st and 29th foot, and the 2nd Europeans. The former and latter corps had to right about face, and fire to front and rear! It was in the afternoon that the Ghorchurras came down close to Pennycuick's brigade; and just as Christie was getting his horse artillery guns to bear upon them, the unfortunate panic occurred on the part of ene of the Queen's dragoon regiments'.

"The natives say that Goolab Singh is furnishing the whole of the Sikh rebels with money to carry on the war against us."—

Bombay Telegraph.

21st January, 1849.

I have but little information to send you to-day, further than that very heavy firing was heard at Lahore, in the direction of the Commander-in Chief's camp, on the evening of the 18th, and also on the morning of the 19th instant. I have not heard whether a second fight has occurred. The fort of Mooltan has not yet fallen, but yesterday accounts mentioned that our sap-pers had run a mine within 25 yards of the ditch, and that it was expected in the course of six or eight days more, all would be ready for springing it. The delay on our part in taking this fortress has told sadly and most unfavourably against our " prestige" or "ikbal" (as the natives say)! Should Goolab Sing coalesce openly, which he is now (and has been all along) doing secretly, and join his forces of 10,000 men and 14 guns with Shere Singh and with Chuttur Singh's forces, and these backed again by Dost Mahomed, with his 12,000 Affghans, we shall have no chance against the combination, with our present crippled army of only 18,000 men, under so totally unfit and so very incompetent a general as Lord Gough. The Commandervery incompetent a general as Lord Gough. in-Chief took command of his fine and splendidly equipped force in November, and he has contrived to lose thereof, in two fights, upwards of one hundred British officers in killed and wounded (including Ramnugger) and 3 000 men! and he has nothing to show for such wilful and most wanton sacrifice of his troops. I correct myself, his lordship has something to show; to the world he has shown how easily he has lost five guns (inclusive of the one at Ramnuggur), and four colours! - he has shown to the world, likewise, how incompetent a general he is, and how unfit to command in the field. I hear, on all sides, his troops have lost all confidence in him. One, if not two royal regiments of cavalry evinced it, in their rapid retreat on the 13th instant !— every one is inquiring of the other, "why does not the Governor-General supersede him, or recall him to the provinces?"

Should our gallant army have actually retrograded to Dingee, thirteen miles from the field of the fight, it will be an inglorious day for the British arms, and it will give great impulse and confidence to the Sikh chieftains. How severely the Court of Directors are punished for their pennywise measures of economy, and reduction of their only "stand by," their army! The whole of "my Lord" Hardinge's annual savings, have been swallowed up in one week's now current expenditure!—to say nothing of the immense addition to their annual pension and invalid list, for the wounded and maimed for life! The Court of Directors would have found it a thousand times cheaper (cheapness rains them!) to have retained an efficient army to overawe the Sikhs; and they will now bow to the opinion of the Duke of Wellington that Sir Charles Napier was the man they required as Commander-in-Chief.

I do most sincerely trust this letter will reach you in time for your overland summary, as I should like the good folks at home to be enlightened in regard to matters out here, and to show them how India is governed! I hear the Governor-General is absolutely afraid to raise new regiments, so strong and so stringent are the orders from the home Government against increasing the number of regiments; and a report gains ground, that the native corps are to be increased to 120 men per company, or 1,200 men per regiment, the same as obtained during the panic in the Burmese war. The native officers in the army all ahrug their shoulders, and say, these are no longer the days of Lord Lake, nor is the Government what it was,—a badshahee mj (a royal Government), but that it has become a bunya-ka-raj (or a Government of petty chandlers).

A letter from Lahore, dated 20th instant, has just been shown me, which says "I send you, as near as I could get them, a list of the killed and wounded. We have got twelve of their guns in park, and they have boned four of our's and some of our colours are gone also! altogether it must have been a desperate fight. The 3rd light dragoons behaved splendidly. Our infantry were several times surrounded, and executed charges to fromt and rear, each rank leading as the exigency required. The enemy's position was at least a mile and a half long, and they tried to turn our flanks with great bravery. Several Europeans were seen in their camp, and one was found dead, with a tremendous long beard."

The second Punjaub war will make the Court of Directors make wry faces, I guess,—our loss, as far as accounts have been yet received, state the European officers to have been ninety-three killed and wounded! of whom thirty-four to thirty-six have been buried, and the loss of men killed and wounded about 2,500!—Bombay Telegraph, Feb. 3.

CAPTURE OF THE FORT OF MOOLTAN.

NOTIFICATION.—Camp, Mukkoo, the 25th January, 1849.—The Governor-General has the highest satisfaction in notifying for public information, that he has this day received intelligence that, on the morning of the 22nd inst., when practicable breaches having been effected, the troops were about to storm the citadel of Mooltan, the Dewan Moolraj surrendered himself, with his whole garrison, unconditionally to the British Government.

The Governor-General directs that a salute of twenty-one guns shall be fired at every principal station of the army, as soon as this notification shall be received.

THE MAHARANI OF LAHORE.

Mr. Newmarch, the constituted attorney of the Maharani Jund Koonwar, has published in the Calcutta papers a letter he has addressed to the Governor-General, complaining of the injustice which she has experienced, in having been arrested and detained a prisoner in the British territories for no just cause whatever, but either upon vague suspicion, supported by no sufficient evidence, of having plotted for the overthrow of the Government of the Lahore state, or from an apprehension on the part of the British Government that her name might, against her will, be made use of by malcontents in the Lahore state to raise a faction against the existing Government of that state; and asserting that the Maharani is in no way implicated in or privy to the rebellion in the Sikh dominions. He alleges that the invasion of our territories was not the act of the Maharani's Government, but of the mutinous soldiery who had just murdered her brother Juwaheer Singh, and threatened the lives of berself and her son; that she remained at the head of the Government during her son's minority, and when the time fixed by the treaty of 1846 for the departure of the British troops approached, the Rani, feeling her inability to resist the machinations of the sirdars without our aid, requested a prolongation of the stay of our force in Lahore, as attested by a letter of Lord Hardinge to the Secret Committee; that when Sheikh Emamooddeen, who had headed the Cashmerian insurgents, surrendered to the Governor-General's agent at Thannah, he pleaded that he had acted under secret instruc-tions from Lall Singh, the Lahore vizier, which led to a special mission of Sir F. Currie and Colonel Lawrence to inves-tigate the accusation, and that Lord Hardinge's letter of directions to Sir F. Currie contains the following passages: "In the event of the Sheikh succeeding in exonerating himself, by proving that he acted in obedience to the orders of the vizier, the Raja's deposition from power and his immediate exile from the Punjab into the British territories will be demanded, under such arrangements as may be determined upon, after the whole case has been fully investigated. In the latter case, it is probable that the interposition of the Rani in his favour will be attempted, and that her Highness will not consent to his exile without great reluctance. Facilities may be afforded arising out of this state of things to deprive her Highness of power." Newmarch goes on to state that Lall Singh went quietly to Benares, and the Maharani offering no facilities for her deprivation, under instructions from the Governor-General, Sir F. Currie and Col. Lawrence concluded, behind the back of the Maharani and her son, with certain of the sirdars, a new treaty, by which the Maharani was shelved, with a pension of Rs. 1,50,000 per annum, and it was agreed that the administration of the country should be conducted by a council of regency consisting of certain sirdars, including Shere Singh, in consultation with the British Resident; that though the Rani was thus deprived, she continued to live with her son, over whom she naturally exercised great influence, which was displeasing to some of the leading sirdars, whose intrigues for palace influence, and for an alliance by marriage with the young prince, were counteracted by the Rani's presence; that in February, 1817, Prema Singh, a servant of Maharajah Golab Singh, was arrested at Lahore on suspicion of being connected with a plot for the assassination of the British Resident; that, some short time previous, this man had endeavoured to obtain a clandestine interview with the Rani by bribing her servants, and she, suspecting some plot for her injury, had acquainted the British Resident with this man's overtures, and warned him of the presence of Prema in Lahore; that in the following August, Tej Singh was created a rajah, and Dhulleep Singh refused, on his investiture, to give him the distinction usual on such occasions, by marking his forehead with the teelak; that it was suspected that his refusal arose from his mother's persuasion, and Tej Singh's enmity against the Maharani was much increased; that, on the 20th of August, the Rani was arrested and placed in close confinement at the fort of Shaikhoopore, sixteen miles from Lahore, and has never been made acquainted with the cause assigned for her arrest; that she remained a close prisoner until June last, when, on the breaking out of the disturbances at Moultan, she was brought a prisoner into the British territories and placed under the custody of the Governor-General's agent at Benares. Mr. Newmarch then sets forth the ineffectual applications made by himself and Jebun Singh, the Rani's vakeel at Calcutta, to obtain a statement of the charges against her and an investigation of them, and the answer made by the Governor-General to a letter of the Rani, that "the Maharani's conduct was examined by the Government of Lahore, and was found to have been such as to have rendered necessary the measures of punishment and precaution which have since been taken, and that the Government of India sees no reason to renew, and declines to renew, investigations which have already been completed and acted upon." Mr. Newmarch denounces the conduct of the British Government towards the Rani as most treacherous and unjust, and pledges himself not to rest until his client's case is placed fully and fairly before the British parliament and public.

The Mofussitite has an article justifying the measures of the Indian authorities with regard to the Maharani.—"At the time the Rani was arrested," it observes, "there was strong ground for believing that she was implicated in various plots, having for their end the destruction of the garrison at Lahore. She was known to be a woman fond of intrigue, and her character, to say the best of it, was but 'indifferent.' Under these circumstances, the removal of the Rani from Lahore to the provinces was a proper and politic measure. Since her removal the affairs of the Punjab have been in a deranged state, and her detention will be perfectly justifiable until all is quiet and settled. Wherever the Rani has appeared, she has always shown considerable ability, and great power over those amongst whom she mingled. That to her voice, and to her appeals, the invasion of our territories in 1845 was owing, is a matter of notoriety. The Rani is a very dangerous person. She is removed from the land where rebellion seems to be widely spread; and she will not meet with any harsh or unkind treatment at the hands of Major Macgregor. It has been urged, that the Rani has been victimized by the treacherous Lahore durbar, and that she had no hand in any of the plots. This is not only possible, but extremely probable,—and, when the fitting season arrives, we trust the Government will afford the Rani every facility in establishing her innocence: but just now the Government can do nothing."

THE TASHMA-BAZ THUGS.

Thuggee and Meypunnaism are no sooner suppressed than a new system of secret assassination and robbery is discovered, proving the truth of Colonel Sleeman's remark, that "India is a strange land, and live in it as long as we may, and mix with its people as much as we please, we shall to the last be constantly liable to stumble upon new moral phenomena to excite our special wonder." As anticipated, at least one set of new actors have to be introduced to the public, and these are the Tashma-baz Thugs.

Tashma-baz Thugs. The Thugs formerly discovered went forth on their murderous expeditions under the protection of a goddess; the Tashma-bazes have for their genius a European! Who in England would be prepared to credit that the thimble-riggers of English fairs have in India given rise to an association that, in the towns, bazars, and highways of these provinces, employs the game of stick and garter as the lure for victims destined to be robbed or murdered? Yet this is the simple fact. The British had hardly gained possession of this territory, before the seeds of the flourishing system of iniquity, brought to light almost half a century afterwards, were sowed in 1802 by a private soldier in one of his Majesty's regiments stationed at Cawnpore. The name of this man was Creagh. He initiated several natives into the mysteries of the stick and garter, and these afterwar is appeared as the leaders of as many gangs, who traversed the country, gambling with whoever they could entrap to try their luck at this game. It consists of rolling up a doubled strap, the player putting a stick between any two of its convolutions, and when the ends of the strap are pulled, it unrolls, and either comes away altogether, or is held at the double by the stick, and this decides whether the player loses or wins. A game requiring apparently no peculiar skill, and played by parties cleverly acting their parts as strangers to each other,—being even dressed in character,—readily tempted any greedy simpleton to try his luck, and show his cash. If he lost, he might go about his business; if he won, he was induced to remain with the gamblers, or was followed, and as opportunity offered was either stupified with poisonous drugs, or by any convenient method murdered. Many corpses found from time to time along the vicinity of the grand trunk road, without any trace of the assassins, are now believed to have been the remains of the Tashmabazes' victims; and distinct information has been obtained from their own members of murders committed by them. The merest trifle, it seems, was sufficient inducement to them to commit the crime, there being one case of three poor grass-cutters murdered by those miscreants in a jungle, merely for the sake of their trifling personal property. Indeed, these gangs seem to have been of a more hardened character than any other yet discovered, for their sole aim was gain, however it might be secured, without the plea of religious motive which regulated the proceedings of the other fraternities. Parties of them used to visit all the chief towns and stations of the Doab and its neighbourhood, and established themselves in the thoroughfares leading to the principal cities. Under the guise of gamblers, they were often brought to the notice of the authorities, and subjected to the trifling punishments due to minor offences; but this was the ve y thing that lulled suspicion as to their real character. They were constantly in the power of many dangerous acquaintances; but these were bribed to silence out of their abundant spoils The police almost everywhere seem to have been bought over. In the city of Gwalior, the kotwal got one-fourth of their profits; and in British territory, five rupees a day have been paid as hush-money to the neighbouring thannah. Amongst their friends was the mess khansama of a regiment at Meerut, the brother of one of their chiefs, and an accomplice. Gold and silver coin and ornaments, pearls and corals, formed part of the remittances that used to be sent to their head-quarters at Cawnpore. Indeed, they seem to have carried on a very safe and lucrative business, until the magistrates of Boolundshuhr and Cawnpore pounced upon them in the beginning of this year. Mr. Montgomery followed up their apprehension by a full report to Government, when the matter was taken up by the Thuggee Department, the sifting muchinery of which, in the hands of Major Graham, soon brought to light all the facts necessary to establish that the gang formed a hitherto unknown class of Thugs. - Agra Messenger, Dec. 2.

TROOPS AVAILABLE FOR DEFENDING THE LOWER PROVINCES.

At the present time, when so much anxiety is felt respecting the means of defending the Lower Provinces against foreign invasion or domestic insurrection, the following statement of the troops available for this purpose, and which approximates to correctness may interest our readers:—

Exclusive of heavy metal in the Arsenal, at Dum-Dum and Allahabad.

The above is a rough approximation, and does not go beyond the mark. The Darjeeling sebundies and Behar station guards at Patna, about 1,400 both together, are not included.

This, we think, will show that there is not much reason to fear a visit from the Nepalese at Calcutta. Their force on the Terai is set down at only 10,000 men, and even were they on hostile thoughts intent, they would not have got far within our frontier before we could place nearly an equal number in their front.—Benyal Hurkaru, Jan. 12.

EAST INDIA RAILWAYS.

For some weeks past the establishment of railways in India has been considered hopeless, and those who delighted to predict that the scheme would never succeed, have had an opportunity of exulting over those who were so sanguine as to believe that India would not continue to be held by a nation which had expended nearly two hundred millions in domestic railways, without participating in the same advantage. The cause of this fatal disappointment of our hopes has been the determination of the Coart of Directors to withdraw their guarantee of a five per cent. dividend on the capital subscribed, and to substitute for it a contribution of five per cent. interest, on certain conditions. But as the previous negotiations which rendered this resolution so disreputable were not sufficiently fresh in the memory of the public to afford a clear understanding of the merits of the case, "An East-India Merchant" has come forward with a letter on the subject to Lord John Russell, in which the origin and progress of those negotiations, and the mutations to which they have been subject, are very clearly and particularly detailed.

That the establishment of a railroad at this presidency—the first ever proposed-which should extend through its whole length, and unite the great mart of the north-west with the only port of the Gangetic valley, and connect the ancient metropolis of India with its modern successor, was involved in great difficulties, will not for a moment be denied. It was felt that without the cordial cooperation of the Government to such an extent as to inspire the public with confidence, there could be little hope of seeing it com-pleted, or even begun. The cautious Court of Directors long held aloof, according to their wont, from this novel undertaking, but the ice was at length broken, and they came forward with a generous proposal to guarantee a minimum dividend of four per cent. on three millions sterling of capital. If this assistance had been offered when railroad enterprises were in high favour with the public at home, the greater part of this sum might have been at once realized, and we might, by this time have had a carriage running on one section of the rail, but it was delayed till an unfavourable reaction had taken place. The railway mania was followed by a panic; John Bull again passed from the extreme of confidence to the extreme of mistrust; and it was no longer possible to raise the funds. The Court then increased the scale of the dividend they had promised, and reduced the amount of deposit; but then came the crash of East-India houses, and all East-India projects fell to the ground. Before they could recover their elasticity, the French, and then the Ausstrian and the Prussian revolution broke out, and all mercantile enterprises throughout Europe were paralyzed. To meet the circumstances of the times, the Court again modified their proposal, and agreed at length to extend their guarantee to a million sterling, on condition of the deposit of only 60,000!. The sum sterling, on condition of the deposit of only 60,000l. was paid into their treasury, and there was still some hope left that the present year would witness the commencement of this great undertaking, either at Bombay or at this presidency. Suddenly, all these hopes are blasted, the labour of four years is lost, and the enterprise is thrown in a state of complete abeyance, by the withdrawal from all railways of the guarantee which the Court of Directors were understood to have promised, and on which alone the undertaking had found favour with the public.

It is scarcely possible that the language employed by the Court of Directors in these negotiations could have been mistaken. In the first instance, the condition they proposed was, "that interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum be allowed on all sums which, in the course of three years from the date of the Railway Company signing the first contract with the East-India Company shall be paid into the East-India Company's treasury by the Railway Company to an extent not exceeding three millions sterling." This was in the beginning of February 1847. A further representation was made by the Railway Company of the inadequacy of these terms, which were contrasted with the more liberal conditions granted by her Majesty's Government to colonial railways, and the Court of Directors stated in reply, on the 5th of India 1847, that it than hed recolved to augment 5th of July, 1847, that "they had resolved to augment the rate of dividend to be guaranteed by the East-India Company to five per cent. provided that the East-India Railway Company, in consideration of the guarantee and of the grant by the Indian Government of the land required for the railway, and of any other facilities which the Government may afford, engage that the Government mails shall be conveyed free of cost, &c. The Railway Company still pressed for better terms, and the Court of Directors then agreed to extend the term of the guarantee to twenty-five years. Turning now to the Western Railway, the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Company, we find that their proposal to the Court in Leadenhall-street ran thus—" That the Honourable the East-India Company should guarantee to the shareholders of the railway a minimum interest of 51. per 1001. per annum, for twenty-five years on the sum necessary for its construction not exceeding 500,0001.," to which the secretary replied that "The Court will guarantee on the part of the East-India Company an interest, or dividend for 25 years at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, on 500,000/. This guarantee was given on the 5th of October, 1847, and the chairman of that company, Lord Wharncliffe, and the Directors, construed it as a promise of a guaranteed dividend to the shareholders, taking the words used by the Court in the sense ordinarily attributed to them, and immediately made known the prospects and advantages of the undertaking by advertisement in the public prints. They announced that "Company would be incorporated by Royal Charter, and that the Honourable the East-India Company had guaranteed 5 per cent. as a minimum dividend for 25 years.' This advertisement was allowed to circulate for eleven months, without contradiction, through the medium of the Times and other influential journals. On the 29th of August, 1848, however, Mr. Mibill Slaughter, of the Stock Exchange, addressed the Honourable Court relative to some doubts which had been raised as to the real nature of their guarantee, when, to the surprise, and, we may add, the disgust of the community, the Court of Directors for the first time announced that "their guarantee did not extend beyond an interest of 5 per cent. determinable under certain contingencies, and that it did not provide for any dividend to the respective shareholders." This withdrawal of the guarantee "operated as an extinguisher on the prospects of the Indian railway cause, and the natural result has been a feeling of deep dissatisfaction commensurate with the importance of the object and the unexpectedness of its failure."

The effect of this proceeding on the railway cause has been such as those who urged it forward at the India-House must have expected. Indian railways have been at once laid on the shelf. The Court of Directors cannot but have been fully aware that the only Indian railways have been at once laid on the shelf. The ground on which capitalists were induced all along to subscribe to Indian railways, was the guarantee of five per cent. on their subscriptions for twenty-five years by the Government of this country; and that the moment this guarantee was withdrawn, and a loan equal to five per cent. of the subscribed capital substituted in its stead, public confidence would be extinguished, and the whole scheme would fall to the ground. This result was so inevitable, that it must have been anticipated, and we shall not, we are certain, be chargeable with any improper questioning of the motives of public men, when we affirm that it is greatly to be feared that the object of this fatal announcement was to bring about this result, and at once to quash all further attempts on the part of the public to undertake the establishment of railroads in India. The effect of this measure on our prospects, however, can only be temporary. It is not to be supposed that while her Majesty's ministers are straining every nerve to give the Crown colonies the benefit of railways, the prejudices of Leadenhall-street will long be permitted to deprive the most magnificent dependency of the Crown, which enjoys an annual revenue surpassed only by three of the European powers, of this advantage .- Friend of India, Jan. 18.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AJEET SING LADOOWALLAH, the chief who, bolding a fief under the British Government, was one of the first to signalize his gratitude by joining the invasion of the Sikhs, and burning Loodianah, for which atrocity he was taken and sent to Allahabad as a prisoner, under little or no restraint, managed to escape with all his followers, and nearly all his property.

THE NIPAL GOVERNMENT is about to commence a new system of collecting the revenue of the country, and abolish the existing one, of employing chaklidars and foujdars.

THE UNION BANK. - A Report of the Executive Committee of the Union Bank gives a summary view of the progress of liquidation, and the operation of the scheme finally adopted for winding up the affairs of that unfortunate institution. It is in the highest degree satisfactory. On the 1st of August last the liabilities of the Bank were between fifty-two and fifty-three lakhs of rupees. Creditors to the amount of forty-four lakhs have come into the scheme of liquidation. The total amount now outstanding in the hands of creditors who have not signed, or been otherwise arranged with, is computed to be under four lakhs; and one-half of these claims is held by the agents of absent principals, who have not sent out any definite instructions. In the course of the next six months there will be few, if any, dissidents; and the main difficulty in winding up the affairs of the Bank has thus been successfully overcome. The Committee have published a schedule exhibiting the names of shareholders who have paid, or given security for, the full amount of their respective assessments. The whole sum thus secured amounts to about Rs. 18,00,000, of which 13,20,000 have been received in cash; and dividends have been paid to the extent of Rs. 11,14,510. Claims to the amount of Rs. 3,77,000 have been adjusted by transfer of assets, and of claims which have not come under the scheme, the amount of Rs. 3,44,650 has been otherwise arranged for .- Friend of India.

SEIZURE OF GUNS.—The officiating superintendent of police has made a seizure which, from its nature, is at the present moment a matter of some interest. From information he had received, he proceeded up the river and overtook two native boats, bound for some place beyond Lucknow, ostensibly laden with grain, under which, however, were found concealed eight pieces of artillery. These were captured by Mr. McCann, who has since taken five other pieces intended for the same destination.—

Mr. J. Barrow was admitted as an attorney and solicitor of the Supreme Court, on the  $15 \mathrm{th}$  January.

THE GRAND JURY has found a true bill against Mr. W. H. Bolst, late registrar of the Bengal Secretarial, for obtaining money on false pretences from the government.

ASSEMBLAGE OF TROOPS AT TERAL. - Strange stories have been afloat for some days past regarding a hostile assemblage of Nepaulese troops on the Terai. The Maharajah has been out on a hunting party for some weeks past, accompanied by the Resident and a very large suite; but there are suspicions that he intends to fly at higher game. A descent on Calcutta even has been apprehended, and government is sufficiently alarmed to order up to Dinapore the wing of H. M.'s 80th, just arrived from that place, and to take other precautionary steps.—Hurkaru, Jan. 11.

THE TENASSERIM left Calcutta on the 18th January, to bring up a wing of H. M.'s 25th foot from Madras.

MEERGUNGE INDIGO CONCERN. - Some shares in the wellknown Meergunge Indigo concern in Jessore were sold at auction on the 15th January, by Messrs Mackenzie, Lyall & Co-The first lot, the Pakadangah factory, brought 1,500 rupees per anna share; the second lot, two annas in the Meergunge concern, gave 16,000 rupees per anna share - both prices being considered very low.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE. - The members of the Uncovenanted Service are again agitating for a leave of absence memorial, and have held another meeting.

FROM LUCKNOW, we only hear of festivities and rejoicings. Colonel Sleeman (of Thug celebrity) arrived there on the 11th January, and commenced his official duties as Resident. usual honours were given at his reception, and we were sorry to learn, though there is plenty of money for exhibiting fights of wild beasts, that the Observatory is to be broken up, an establishment which did honour to that little monarchy.

OPIUM SALE. - The result of the third opium sale of the season, held at the Exchange, Jan. 22, is as follows:-Chests. Highest. Lowest. Average. Proceeds. Behar .. 2,205 830 883-3-10 18,48,325 820 840 825 828-2-2 6,79,075

The increase on the averages of the last sale is Rs. 25 5-6 for the Patna drug, and Rs. 23 13-11 for Benares.

THE BENGAL STEAM FUND. - A meeting of the members of the above fund, organized in 1833, for the purpose of securing to Bengal a steam communication with England and Suez, took place January 11, to decide between two claims that had been preferred by different parties for an unappropriated balance of

of the fund. Lieutenant Waghorn was one claimant; the proprictor of that steamer India were the other.

Mr. R. S. Thomson proposed—" That as a reward to Lieut. Waghorn for his zeal and exertions in the cause of steam in Bengal, Rs. 5,000 of the unappropriated balance of the Bengal Steam Fund be paid to him, and that the remainder be made over to the proprietors of the steamer India, through their representatives, Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co.

Rs. 13,825, each applicant claiming to have furthered the object

Mr. Willis seconded the proposition.

But Sir Thomas Turton moved the following, as an amendment:-

" That the sum of Rs. 3,000 be paid out of the unappropriated balance of the Bengal Steam Fund, to Lieut. Waghorn, as a reward for his zeal and assiduity in his exertions in the cause for steam for Bengal, and that the remainder be paid over to the proprietors of the India steamer, through their representatives, Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co."

The amendment was carried by four votes against two.—Hur-

ESTATE OF ALEXANDER AND Co. - A fourth dividend at Co.'s annas three and one pie per cent. is now payable at the office of the official assignee, John Gordon, Esq.

THE PUNJAB. - A report is current here, that Sir H. Lawrence is to be the lieutenant-governor of the Punjab states, which are to be annexed as far as Jelum, including a portion of the Moultan province, as far as the Attock, the fort included. The agreement between Chutter Sing and Dost Mahommed is, that the latter is to pay a lac of rupees yearly for the space of four years, when young Dhuleep will attain his majority; then the young king is to make his own terms. - Englishman, Jan. 13.

BENGALEE LANGUAGE. - The Hon. the Deputy Governor of Bengal has conferred degrees of honour on Mr. E. Jenkins, C. S., and Capt. J. S. Banks, 33rd N.I., for their eminent attainments in the Bengalee language.

Delhi. - Mrs. and Miss Cureton left this on Monday evening for Calcutta on their way home, bearing with them, we know full well, the heartfelt sympathies of the whole of Upper India for the bereavement they have suffered in the death of the gallant man whose loss they mourn. Lady Gough and suite left this station on Thursday morning, in progress to Meerut and Saharunpoor, where her Ladyship remains, we are told, till the con-The Countess of Dalhousie and suite clusion of the campaign. reached Delhi this morning, and halt here we are given to understand, for ten days at least. Her Ladyship is the guest of Sir Theophilus Metcalfe during her stay. Mr. Millett, late member of council, and his family, are also in Delhi to-day, on their way to Bombay and England. Fourteen Sikhs, condemned to imprisonment for life, arrived from Lahore during this week on their way to stations, lower down the country. They have been temporarily lodged in the zillah jail. The 61st Regiment Native Infantry, which were to have passed through Delhi on their way to the frontier, have been directed to move through Meerut, having to escort a considerable amount of treasure from that station, in addition to what they have brought up from below. They were at Boolundshuhur on the 11th instant.—On Thursday morning, departed this life, Prince Dara Bukht, heir apparent to the throne of Delhi, and with him, we have some reason to believe, all the right of the royal house to the succession, such having been guaranteed to him individually, and to no other member of the family. We sincerely trust that such is really the case, and that our Government will now be in a position to adopt steps for making efficient arrangements for the dispersion, with a suitable provision, of the family on the death of the present king. remains of the deceased prince were interred near Cheeragh Delhi within a few hours of his death. It is a curious fact, that nearly all the native papers have long since omitted the designation of "Padshah" when alluding to the king of Delhi, styling him merely " Shah."-Delhi Gazette, Jan. 13.

Assam Tra Company .- The General Meeting of the proprietors of this Company took place on the 16th January, when the Directors' report of the past year was read. It announced a large advance in the crop of the past year, the gross outturn amounting to 2,10,655 lb., making an excess of 50,321 lb. over the previous season: "thus, in the short space of two seasons, the crop of tea yielded by the southern division has been increased by 74,388 lb. or upwards of 59 per cent." This large increase in the produce has been unaccompanied by any significant advance in the local expenditure at the plantations, whilst the general expenditure of the Company in India has been again greatly reduced; whilst the annual produce has increased by upwards of 50 per cent., the expenditure in India has decreased in almost an equal ratio. Favourable accounts were received from home of the qualities of the teas.

THE BANK OF BENGAL lowered its rates on the 11th January all round one per cent.

THE NABOB OF THE CARNATIC. - There can be no doubt of the fact, that Sir Henry Pottinger is applying the screw with tolerable force in the case of the Nabob of the Carnatic; but whether the nerves of that interesting prince will give way under the present amount of pressure, is a matter as yet to be decided. We understand that, in order to mark his displeasure, the Governor, a short time time since, forwarded the autograph letter of the Queen, congratulating the Nabob upon his marriage, through the ordinary channel, without permitting any of the ceremonies which, in Mahomedan eyes, alone render such compliments of value. His Highness, determined not to be outdone, returned the letter to Sir Henry Pottinger after the same undignified fashion,-thus giving her Gracious Majesty the cut direct. No access on the part of respectable Europeans is now permitted to the Nabob, even through the medium of the Chepauk agent; and we have heard that the prohibition has also been extended to the case of a physician, who wished to have an interview with him. In the mean time, the Nabob pursues his usual routine of debasing employments, and indulges, without restraint, in a course of life which must soon attract the attention of the home authorities. - Athenæum, Jan. 13.

THE NISAM has appointed a new minister, Shums-ool-Oomra. On the receipt of the reply of the Governor-General to the Resident's letter, announcing the dismissal of the late minister and the nomination of Syf Jung, the Resident requested an audience of the Nizam, for the purpose of communicating that reply. The Resident proceeded to the durbar, accompanied only by his moonshee and the residency treasurer. He was conducted to the presence by Syf Jung and Rusheed-ool-Moolk. In addition to the appointment of Shums-ool-Oomra as minister, his Highness signified his intention of nominating Rajah Deeraj as peshkar, observing that these were the only two men he knew capable of extricating the country from its present difficulties. Nuwab Shums-ool-Oomra was a competitor for the ministry during the reign of the late Nizam. His pretensions were fa-voured by the English, and the whole tenour of this nobleman's life showed the just estimate formed by our Government of his character and abilities. During his minority, his estates were administered by his uncle, who resigned the charge into his nephew's hands burdened with a debt of nearly a crore of rupees; but, by great economy and good management of his affairs, the Nuwab was enabled to pay off the debts, arrears of the troops, &c., and has ever since been without incum-brances, and highly respected. Rajah Deeraj is well known as an able man of business, habituated to it from youth, and having experienced the advantage of seeing all the details of Government conducted by his late father, Rajah Chundoo Lal.-Ibid.

GOLCONDAH. - The Madras Athenaum informs us that peace has been restored to this district by the unconditional surrender of the malcontent, Rajah Chinna Bophaty, who had been sent in to Vizagapatam a prisoner, there to await the pleasure of Govemment.

GOOMSOOR. - The Calcutta Englishman says : - " Our last letters from the Goomsoor district continue the tale of unchecked outrages. They mention that, on the night of the 26th November, Chokra Bissye's people burnt the village of Batya Boordah, in the mootah of Bully Pudra, killed three and wounded eigh. of the inhabitants; that, on the night of the 29th, they burnt a village in the mootah of Puddia, killed one and wounded two; and that, on the 7th December, they burnt Cusba Boogooda, in the mootah of Boogoods, plundered some of the inhabitants, and burnt some of the cattle. The collector, Mr. Bannerman, who is now at Nowgaum, has published a proclamation, stating that the above murders and disturbances were not the work of Chokra Bissye and his people, but of the Pamves and Dumdarees of the villages, and offering rewards for the apprehension The people in many instances are removing their of the latter. property to other talooks."

BANGALORE. - The proposed ball and supper by the gallant bachelors of Bangalore, came off on the 10th January, with the greatest eclat. The public rooms were tastefully decorated with wreaths of leaves and flowers interwoven, and a choice assortment of flowering plants in vases diffused a delicious fragrance through the apartments. The bands of H.M.'s 15th Hussars and 51st regiment were in attendance, and played alternatively through the evening. The company began to assemble about half past nine o'clock, and the rooms soon became crowded with the élite or the station. Dancing commenced shortly after ten, and was kept up with a great spirit until midnight, when the guests sat down to a sumptuous supper laid out under the tents; dancing was resumed, and continued until a late hour, when the guests dispersed, highly gratified with the hospitality and urbanity of their gallant entertainers.

H.M.'s 25th REGIMENT.—Five companies of H.M.'s 25th regiment of 100 effective men each, with a proper complement of commissioned and non-commissioned officers, under the command of Major Strange, embarked for Calcutta on board the H.C. steamer Tenasserim, on the the 16th January.

BOMBAY.

GENERAL AUCHMUTY.

Several of our local papers have lately been filled with the strongest censure of General Auchmuty, on whom the whole blame of the delay in the movement of the Bombay troops has been thrown. It has been affirmed that this procrastination grew out of his having been disappointed of the command of the troops; it has been broadly hinted that public interests have been sacrificed to personal pique, and that the delinquent general ought to be brought forth-with to a court-martial. We have, however, the strongest reason for believing that these imputations have arisen entirely from misinformation, and that the character of a fine old Peninsular officer, possessed of much staff experience, and, above all, of the valuable quality of a cool head, yet full of energy and good sense, has in this case been unjustly aspersed. His pretensions to take the command of the Bombay division were fair and reasonable, and he was appointed by the Government under which he served to the charge of the force. The Supreme Government objected to this arrangement, on account of his seniority to General Whish. This fact had not, it appears, been overlooked; but as it was originally expected that the Commander-in-Chief would be at the head of the grand shikar party, which was to take the field in winter,—and it was, moreover, understood that it would break cover at Mooltan, and it was known that Sir Walter Gilbert, who was also senior to General Whish, would accompany his excellency, it was believed that all the major-generals would have been alike generals of division. When, however, the prohibition of the Supreme Government reached Bombay, Colonel Dundas was put in command of the army,—certainly a much larger force than is usually placed under a British Colonel; General Auchmuty, though chagrined, as we may well suppose the old soldier to be, at the loss of this opportunity of aiding to his laurels, most cheerfully and zealously co-operated with Colonel Dundas to reinforce General Whish. But troops which had to convoy a heavy bridge equipage, and a battering train, with its shot and shells for a siege, and engineer's stores, could not move on at a railway pace. Carriage has been exceedingly scarce in Upper Scinde, and the progress of the force has consequently been retarded. Whenever the movements of the force are impartially examined in conjunction with the obstacles to locomotion which existed, it will be fully acknowledged that there has been no unnecessary delay, and justice to the veteran soldier obliges us to say that the force could not have been moved on more rapidly, even if he had been allowed to lead them on to victory.—Friend of India, Jan. 11.

THE MAIL with letters from London to Dec. 23, reached

Bombay Jan. 26.

THE INDIAN NAVY. - An Act has just been passed by the Supreme Legislative Council in India, to enable Courts-martial to be held on officers of the Indian navy. The Governors in Council of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, are vested with power by which they may direct any superior officer, captain or commander, of the Indian navy to hold Courts-martial in any one of the Eastern Seas, the officer in question presiding over any Court. Officers of the Indian navy, whether holding command, or not,—or, when a sufficiency of such of sufficient rank may not be found to be present, officers of the Company's army above the rank of captain, and officers of the royal navy, should such be disposed to act, are to furnish the constituents of the Courtmartial.

CIRCULATION OF INDIAN BOOKS .- At the 30th anniversary of the Bombay Auxiliary Bible Society, presided over by the bishop, on the 4th January, it was announced, that the Mahomedans and Hindoos, in imitation of the example of the Bible Society, have begun to avail themselves of the press to multiply at a cheap rate their sacred books. Until very lately, neither the Koran nor any of the sacred works of the Hindoos had been printed, and manuscript copies were of course both scarce and expensive. A wealthy Mahomedan, however, some few years ago, determined upon following in the steps of our Bible and Tract Societies, and got up an edition of the Koran, with a running commentary. The thing was found to succeed, and the same work has since run through several editions: 12,000 copies are said to have been distributed in this way during the last few The Hindoos, also, have been committing to the press some of their theological works. About 8,000 copies of the principal of their sacred books are represented to have been thus put into circulation.

A DANGEROUS EXPERIMENT .- A gentleman residing on the Esplanade has in his possession a fine young tiger aged about five months. Its owner is trying the rather dangerous experiment of bringing the animal up in the bosom of his family, in fact as one of the household gods. At night, always after the brute his di ied, he is let out of his cage to frisk and frolic on the greeiswird, where he has on one or two occasions displayed an unequivocal penchant for the flavour of goats and dogs. By and bye it is feared his taste may lead him to exhibit an unpleasant fondness for little children, and when hungry a leg or an arm or a bit of the breast of a full-grown man or woman may not come amiss to his palate. At present he only frightens ayahs and coolies, and enjoys an occasional peripatet's supper by killing a goat or fowl, and devouring the same.

A HUNDRED VOLTAIC BATTERIES are at present being fitted up in the dockyard for the purpose of attempting an illumination at Bombay by means of electric light.

THE STEAM ENGINE. - We have seen a very ingenious model, by Mr. Mealon, of a steam-engine with vibrating cylinders, where the steam-valves are at the top and bottom of the cylinders instead of being in the trunnions on which they are suspended. The contrivances are perfectly original and extremely ingenious, and reflect the highest credit on the inventor .- Bom-

THE LATE BRIGADIER PENNYCUICK.—Amongst the many who have fallen victims to Lord Gough's mismanagement on the banks of the Jhelum, we find the names of Brigadier Pennycuick and his son. Colonel Pennycuick was an old peninsular officer of distinction. He commanded H. M.'s 17th during the first Affghan war; led the gallant corps at the capture of Kelat, in 1839; and was nearly lost by shipwreck at the mouth of the Indus on his return to Bombay. He was at Aden with the head-quarter wing from 1811 to 1845, and conducted with the utmost credit a flying expedition into the interior in the first-On the return of his corps to England, named of these years. he exchanged into H. M.'s 24th, at the head of which he fell on the 13th January.-Ibid.

A WING OF THE 94TH FOOT at Cannanore have been ordered to be held in readiness to start for Bombay by steam at an hour's notice, should their services be required by our Government. It is also rumoured that a wing of the 10th Hussars from Kirkee, and the 1st Grenadiers, and 22nd N.I. from the presidency, have been directed to be prepared for embarkation for Scinde at any moment it may be requisite to despatch them thither MILITARY.—Yesterday morning the grenadier company with the band and part of No. 1 of H. M.'s 22nd, under command of Colonel Cotton, marched upon the Presidency at two o'clock. A second detachment of the gallant regiment, under command of Brevet Major George, c.B., moved this morning, and the third and last march to-morrow for the same destination. mour says they will remain at Bombay only until relieved by a wing of the Highlanders, when they will embark for Kurrachee. -The 4th troop of horse artillery is in orders to march from hence en route to Deesa in a few days. It is believed they will march across country, and not embark at Panwell.—The undermentioned officers accompany the wing of H.M.'s 22nd regiment from hence to Bombay:—Ist division.—Lieut. Col. Cotton, Capt. Thackwell, Lieut. and Acting Adjutant Goddard, Lieut. L. Cotton, Lieut. W. Smith. 2nd division.—Lieut. Miller, Lieut. Pennelather, Ensign King. 3rd division.—Brevet Major F. D. George, c.B., Lieut. Stack, Ensign Hughes, Ensign Butt, Quarter-Master Young, Dr. Currie. Each division marches 188 strong, making a total of 564 non-commissioned rank and file. - Our highly respected brigadier-general returned to division head-quarters on Monday last. - Poonah Chronicle, Jan. 26.

PRESENTATION OF COLOURS TO THE 1ST GRENADIER REGI-MENT N.I. - On Monday afternoon a large concourse of persons attended to witness the interesting ceremony of the presentation of a new pair of colours to the 1st grenadier regiment of N. I. by Mrs. Boileau. The whole brigade was on its ground at half past four r.M., and formed a general line,—the horse artillery and H. M.'s 22nd regiment on the right, the 14th N. I. and European L. I. on the left, and the regiment who were to receive the new colours in the centre. The colours about to be presented were deposited a few paces in front of the brigadier's flag-staff, under a small escort. The line received the brigadier with the usual salute, when, on arms being again shouldered, the right flank company of the 1st grenadiers, with the band of that regiment, proceeded to the front, and wheeled up facing the flag. The two subalterns who accompanied the company stepped forward, received and unfurled the colours. The escort brought up their right shoulders and advanced in open order, the band playing the Guard Troop, or "Grenadiers' March," till it arrived opposite the regiment's left, where it halted for a few moments, and by word from the brigadier a general salute was given by the whole The escort with the colours then marched through the entire of its own regiment, filed round its right flank, and proceeded until it arrived opposite to the old colours, when it wheeled to the right and formed a street. Arms were then shouldered. The brigade was immediately afterwards formed into three sides of a square, after which Mrs. Boileau, and a considerable number of ladies and gentlemen, approached the centre. Major Tritton, of the 10th royal hussars, advancing, presented the Queen's colour, and Captain Studder, of the engineers, that of the Company, to Mrs. Boileau. The two ensigns that were to carry them stepped forward, when that lady addressed the regiment, as nearly as we could learn, in the following words: " Major Down, officers, and men, of the 1st grenadiers, I have been been requested to present you with your new colours today. Believe me, I feel highly honoured by the preference shown me, and in endeavouring to fulfil the request, let me assure you, though quite unable to make a speech on the occasion, my good wishes are not the less sincere. I now, therefore, commit these colours to your charge, feeling certain that the 1st grenadiers will defend them gallantly whenever they may be called into action." To which Major Down, the commanding officer of the regiment, replied as follows:-" Mrs. Boileau,-In the name of the officers and men of the 1st grenadiers, I beg to render you our best thanks for the honour you have conferred on us in presenting us with our new colours. With respect to the latter part of your address, it is scarcely necessary for me to say that if, at any time, incitement is necessary in the performance of the soldier's duty, the remembrance of the honour this day done us will be sufficient to stimulate us to rally more de-votedly round the banner presented to us by fair lady's hand." At the conclusion of Major Down's address, the ladies and gentlemen who had advanced to the presentation, retired from the square, and the brigade reformed line. The new colours being hoisted in the grenadiers, the old ones were advanced, and taken off by the escort,—the line presenting arms as they passed away. The line then moved a company's depth to the rear, leaving the grenadiers with their new colours on the old alignment: the corps broke into open column of companies, and marched past the brigadier in order of review. On their re-entering the alignment the whole brigade formed mass of columns, and after marching past, moved to their respective lines in quick time. The afternoon was cloudy and unusually cool, and we were at one time apprehensive of a damper upon the proceedings in the shape of a fall of rain; but it passed away. The parade movements throughout were performed, as far as our knowledge of such maters enables us to judge, with the greatest precision, and the spectators appeared much gratified at the ceremony. dinner party (followed by a ball and supper) was given in the evening at the mess of the 1st grenadicrs, where every possible arrangement was made for the entertainment of the guests The whole went off remarkably well; and the dancing, which was kept up with much spirit, continued till nearly two o'clock. -Poonah Chronicle, Jan. 19.

Scinds.—On the evening of the 13th instant, letters were received by the officer commanding the troops at Hydrabad directing that a wing of the 24th N.I. with Brett's battery (4th co. 4th batt.—Golundauze), should hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Sukkur by forced marches,—their place to be supplied by a wing of the 10th N.I. from Bhooj, and the 6th co. 4th batt. Golundauze from Kurrachee. A wing of the 8th foot were at the same time ordered to march for Sukkur, the remaining wing to follow on the arrival at Kurrachee from Bombay of the left wing of the 22nd foot, which leaves to-day by the steamer Semiramis. The head-quarter wing of the 27nd are now on their way to the Presidency for duty, where they will probably remain till the arrival of the two regiments now on the'r way from England, when the wing of the 2nd European light infantry will relieve them from Poona, and they proceed to Kurrachee to join the left wing. The 1st or Leslie's troop of horse artillery have been ordered to march on Sukkur from Deess, the 4th (Cotgrave's) troop from Poona taking their place. The following troops are now on the Indus, or shortly will be:—

where a body of mountain marauders were once more plundering the villages on the plains.—Bombay Times, Jan. 24.

The steamer Medusa, which arrived yesterday, brings news from Scinde to the 26th, at which date everything was perfectly quiet throughout the country. The story of the descent of the Affghans was a piece of fabrication from beginning to end. The march of the 1st troop of horse artillery from Deesa to Sukkur, and of the 4th from Poona to Deesa, has been countermanded. The 78th remain at Belgaum, and the hussars at Kirkee. The wing of H. M.'s 8th foot which had marched en route for Hydrabad on the 21st, returned to Kurrachee on the morning of the 25th. The commissioner was at Shikarpore. Major-General Auchmuty and staff were at Sukkur. The left wing 27th N.I. left Kurrachee on the 18th for Upper Scinde. Brigadier Wilson had reached Kurrachee and assumed command of the brigade on the 20th.—Ibid., Jan. 31.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

Bombay Castle, Jan. 27, 1849.—The following Statements, Nos. 1 and 2, showing the officers belonging this presidency who are entitled to participate in the general Off-Reckoning Fund for the past year, together with the rates of advances payable to those present in India, are published for information:

COMMERCIAL REPORTS.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, 5 o'CLOCK, 2ND FEB., 1849.—We have to report a less amount of business during the past fortnight, than has been the case since the commencement of the present season. The state of affairs in the Punjaub has been productive of considerable anxiety, and the various exaggerated rumours that have been current in the bazaar have caused dealers to act with great caution, more especially within the latter portion of the period under notice. The market is bare of most kinds of manufactured goods, the supplies to hand since the date of our last being on a small scale, and placed by importers without difficulty; but with the exception of a small quantity of some particular fabrics, we have no sales to arrive to notice.

CEYLON.

We have before us an estimate of the revenue and expenditure of the Government of Ceylon for the year 1849; the statement informs us that the revenues of the island amount to about 408,000*l.*, and this sum is raised from a population of about a million and a-half. One-fourth of this sum arises from the Customs; in the lower provinces of Bengal, the Customs furnish one-thirtieth of our resources. In Ceylon, the land-tax is less than a tenth of the entire revenue; here it forms the very sinews of our finances. A moderate land-tax is, after all, the tax for all Indian possessions, insular or continental, and the sooner the Government of Ceylon can simplify the system of taxation by completing the survey and assessment of the land, and substituting a general land-tax for the numerous and vexatious imposts which now press upon the springs of industry and the patience of the people, the better for the happiness and prosperity of the island.

We have perused with no small satisfaction the address of Sir Emerson Tennent, on the taxation of the island. It is one of the

We have perused with no small satisfaction the address of Sir Emerson Tennent, on the taxation of the island. It is one of the clearest, most straightforward, and comprehensive documents on this subject we have ever perused, and it is most eminently calculated to remove those impressions regarding the fiscal arrangements on the island which it has been attempted to create. He delineates the system of taxation which prevailed in the days of the Dutch, and which was perpetuated, with little variation, by our own Government, until a very late period, when the science of political economy had exposed its errors and its impolicy. He describes the scientific principles on which the Government of the island was led to modify that system and abolish the taxes which interfered with the progress of national industry, as well as the grounds on which the recent taxes were substituted. The whole subject is placed in a very different light from that in which it has hitherto been represented. His observations create a strong conviction that the late insurrection was not the result of the new taxes; and we have the additional assurance of the Chief Justice, Sir Anthony Oliphant, that it was to be attributed to the disaffection of those who had been deprived of social and political power, and of sacerdotal influence, by the establishment of our supremacy. Sir Emerson's address is one of the most masterly exposés which has yet appeared of the financial position and prospects of the island.—Friend of India, Jan. 18.

ULTRA-GANGETIC PROVINCES.

A MOST destructive conflagration occurred at Maulmain on Christmas-day. The Government coal depôt and marine stores, the offices and godowns of several houses of agency, containing English goods to a large amount, the public rooms, and nearly 600 houses, were among the number of the buildings consumed. According to the Advertiser, the value of the property thus destroyed probably does not fall short "of one-fourth of the total wealth of the town of Maulmain." Six lives, also, are ascertained to have been lost, but it does not appear that any European was among the sufferers. As regards the cause of this most calamitous event, considerable mystery would seem to prevail. The received opinion, however, is, that the origin of it was " purely accidental," but that incendiarism spread the devastation when once it had commenced. By the print already quoted, it is said that "enemies in our own camp, in the shape of scoundrels of home growth, encouraged and aided its progress, in order to profit by plunder during the confusion which would Even this account is bad enough, but we are thankful ensue." that suspicion does not fall on the Burmese, since such an evidence of hostility on their part as that of the destruction of Maulmain by fire would afford ground for grave anxiety at the present juncture. It is to be hoped that they neither have had any hand in the catastrophe, nor will be temped to take advantage of it. The houses of business whose premises were consumed are those of Messrs. Buchanan, Paterson, and Co., Messrs. Gardner and Co. (whose books are destroyed), and Messrs. A. Ross and Co. One incendiary had been caught, tried, and sentenced to hard labour on the roads in irons for two years; a punishment very inadequate to his crime.—Madras Spectator Extra, Jan. 22.

The Indian islanders write on palm leaves, which have received no other preparation than that of being dried, and cut in slips; or on the inner bark of trees, a little polished only by rubbing; or on slips of the bamboo cane, simply freed from its epidermis; or on stone, metal, or paper. The instrument for writing with on the palm leaf, bark, and the bamboo is an iron style, and their writing is, in fact, a rude engraving, which is rendered legible by rubbing powdered charcoal over the surface, which falls into the grooves, and is swept off the smooth surface.

THE NUTMEG, when perfect on the tree, resembles a fine round large peach, and indicates being ripe by the rind opening at the extreme end, displaying an inner substance of a fine dark red, or deep crimson colour, having within its many folds the nut: this substance is the mace. Large quantities of the rind are made a pickle, and also a preserve of. The mace is carefully unfolded off the nut, and requires merely drying in the sun to suit it for exportation. The nut itself, when Ireed of this beautiful and valuable coating, is found to be in a third inclosure—a very thin shell, always allowed to fall, or break off in the progress of preservation, by keeping the nuts spread on wicker hurdles over smoke for about six weeks, when they are then assorted for various markets, and kept in fine unslaked chunam (lime) until required for exportation. Some trees yield spice clothed in white mace, but they are rare.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch Royal Asiatic Society, on the 18th January, the President, Dr. Wilson, directed the attention of the meeting to the interesting fact, that several series of cave temples, hitherto wholly unknown to Europeans, had just been brought to notice in various parts of the Mahratta country. Among these, the most remarkable are those near the village of Kuda, situated on the Rajouri creek, in the Konkan, between three and four miles west from the town of Thal, and about forty-two miles in the straight line from Bombay. The discovery of these caves occurred under the following circumstances:—

About the commencement of the rains, Vishnu Shastri, the Brahmin who had assisted Mr. Wathen, Dr. Wilson, and others, so much in the deciphering of inscriptions in the cave character, was appointed manalkari of a district in the Kon-When about to commence his duties, he called upon Dr. Wilson, who asked him to make every inquiry in his power about the existence, or otherwise, of a series of caves, with a chaitya, as the centre from which the caves at Manad, which are only monkish cells, would probably be found to be only an off-set. In a short time, he reported to Mr. Law, the collector of Surat, and to Dr. W., as the result of his search, the information which he had obtained of existence of a magnificent series near Thal. Mr. Law, at the opening of the season, sent the Brahmin personally to inspect the caves, and he found them to correspond with descriptions which he received of them. He also brought with him a facsimile of some of the inscriptions, which Dr. Wilson exhibited to the meeting. Mr. Law has been the first European to inspect them. In a letter, dated the 15th January, addressed to Dr. Wilson, he states, "I visited the caves of Kuda a few days ago, and I may safely say, that they far exceeded my expectations. There are twenty-two caves altogether, great and small, and no less than four of them have chaityss. The principal one is sixty feet in length, with several bas reliefs of Buddhas sitting cross-legged on lotuses, and others on sinhasans, with the usual attendants, dolphins, &c. The most interesting and best executed, however, are of male and female figures, perhaps representing Buddha and his Saki, the former with a kind of turban for his head-dress. This, as well as the other caves containing chaityas, is on the plan of a vihar, not of a regular temple, as at Karli. I found eighteen inscriptions, and have got good fac similes on cloth of the larger ones, and copies of the rest. The larger ones probably excel any that have been found in the perfect formation of the letters, and are as plain as if they had just been cut. Some of them contain such complicated compound letters, that I think they must be in Sanscrit. I propose to send a short account of these caves, with drawings, shortly to the Bombay Asiatic Society, but in the meantime you are at liberty to mention the purport of what I have stated at the next meeting you may attend, should you wish."

This information must be peculiarly interesting to the students of Indian antiquities.

Mr. Robert Davidson, superintending surgeon to the Nagpore subsidiary force, writing from Kamptee, 3rd January, 1849, to the editor of a Bombay paper, under his own name, gave the following account of a sea-serpent seen by him:—"When returning to India, in the year 1829 (about the end of July), I was standing on the poop of the Royal Saxon, in conversation with Captain Petrie, the commander of that ship, since deceased: we were at a considerable distance S. W. of the Cape of Good Hope, in the usual track of vessels to this country, going rapidly along (seven or eight knots) in fine smooth water. It was in the middle of the day, and the other passengers were at lunch, the man at the wheel, a steerage passenger, and ourselves, being the only persons on the poop. Captain Petrie and my-self, at the same instant, were literally fixed in astonishment by the appearance, a short distance ahead, of an animal, of which no more generally correct description could be given than that by Capt. McQuhæ. It passed within thirty-five yards of the ship, without altering its course in the least, but as it came right abreast of us, it slowly turned its head towards us. Apparently about one-third of the upper part of its body was above water, in nearly its whole length, and we could see the water curling up on its back as it moved along, but by what means it moved we could not perceive. We watched it going astern with intense interest until it had nearly disappeared, when my companion, turning to me with a countenance expressive of the utmost astonishment, exclaimed, 'Good Heavens, what can that be?' The story rests on my own unsupported word, but I pledge that word to its correctness. Professor Owen's supposition, that the animal seen by the officers of the Dadalus was a gigantic seal, I believe to be incorrect, because we saw this apparently similar creature in its whole length, with the exception of a small portion of the tail, which was under water; and by comparing its length with that of the Royal Saxon (about 600 feet), when exactly alongside in passing, we calculated it to be in that, as well as in its other dimensions, greater than the animal described by Capt. McQuhæ."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

MONDAY, March 5, 1849.

Mr. Baillie's motion—a successful one—in the House of Commons, on the 20th of February, for a select committee to inquire into the grievances complained of in the Crown colonies of Ceylon and British Guiana, and whether any measures can be adopted for their better government, provoked a debate, which, whilst it ripped up the whole case of the recent rebellion in the first-named dependency, suggests, upon reflection, serious considerations regarding the whole of our vast eastern possessions. Whilst we are revolving the question of annexation or non-annexation of a country like the Punjab, with less excitement than is manifested by a valetudinarian when he is hesitating whether he shall put on his great coat, we seem to lose sight of the remote chance that, with little warning, the question may be decided by the disjunction of India from Britain.

The merits of the Ceylon case are very difficult to determine, owing to the utter incompatibility of what, by a conventional term, are called the "facts" on both sides. The Colonial department and the local Government are accused of tyranny and oppression of all classes, European settlers or residents, as well as the native population. Even in those West India colonies, whence the groans are loudest, the voices of the negro labourers are still; but in Cevlon all are complainants—planters and ryots; head-men and Buddhist priests; cinnamon-peelers and Veddahs, play several parts in one not very mellifluent harmony. The native malcontents have exhibited their discontent, as Mr. Baillie observed. in the only form in which persons of their condition usually remonstrate with their Government; namely, by open rebellion: the Europeans embodied their griefs and expostulations in the more civil shape of memorials and petitions, which, however, allege matters equally applicable to the former class, and if their allegations are well-founded, they bear out the inference of Sir William Molesworth, that, even if the insurrection could be traced to the machinations of political agitators, misgovernment and oppression must have prepared the Singhalese to receive ill impressions from the teachings of these agents. The European population of Ceylon represent the insupportable burthen of taxation; the tortuous, uncertain, and dilatory administration of the law, chiefly through the incompetence of the persons appointed judges; the wasteful expenditure of the local Government, and other grievances, which, as we before said, touch the native as well as the European community, and are independent of the particular faults of administration imputed to Lord Torrington, who seems to have had a difficult part to play when he arrived in the island, instructed to carry out fiscal reforms involving a heavy sacrifice of revenue, with an insolvent exchequer, and in the teeth of universal commercial distress.

Lord Torrington appears to have applied himself strenuously to this task. He abolished monopolies; he repealed the export duty upon coffee; reduced that upon cinnamon from 1s. to 4d. per pound; and lightened the imposts upon various imported commodities. In order to obtain an equivalent for these large remissions, as a land-tax, the fairest resource, was, in the peculiar and complicated circumstances of the tenures in the island, impracticable, he resorted to the unfortunate taxes which are said to have caused the insurrection in the province of Kandy, whilst they have covered their author with obloquy and ridicule.

It is worthy of notice, although it has not been hitherto noticed, that, amongst other outbreaks in Ceylon, one in the year 1824 singularly resembled, in all its circumstances, except its extent, the late one. It broke out in the Kandyan province of Matelle; it was got up by some petty chiefs, who set up a youth of about twenty as a king, whom they carried about the country; and, upon the approach of the British troops, the insurgents were dispersed and the leaders seized. There was no pretence at that time that taxation or the oppression of government officers provoked the outbreak; it was a political rising of discontented men, desirous of shaking off a foreign yoke, and nothing more.

That the policy of Lord Torrington, and still less his reported personal demeanour and manners, can be entirely exempted from unfavourable criticism, is more, perhaps, than his advocates would contend; but he is fairly entitled to this evidence in his favour, that the Colonial Secretary, under whose orders he acted, has, since the outbreak, pronounced his unqualified approbation of his con-In conveying to Lord Torrington her Majesty's approval of the measures taken by him to suppress the revolt, Lord Grey, in his despatch of the 24th October last, says: "I have further to add, that it is not merely your exertions at the moment of danger which seem to me entitled to approval, and that my confidence in the policy you had previously adopted, and which is alleged to have been the cause of these disturbances, is in no degree shaken by the occurrences to which I have referred." His Lordship, in other parts of the same despatch, attributes the revolt to intentional misrepresentations of the measures of the Government, and hypothetically accuses European residents in the colony of lending their dangerous countenance to such misrepresentations:

"The Queen has learnt with regret that the public peace of the colony had been disturbed, and that a part of the native population had been excited to acts of rebellion, by false representations industriously circulated as to the intentions of the local Government, and as to the nature and objects of the ordinances recently passed to sanction the imposition of certain new taxes, which had been rendered necessary by alterations in the financial arrangements of the island, involving a large reduction of objectionable taxes, for the benefit and encouragement of its trade and commerce.

"In another despatch I propose to enter somewhat fully into the grounds on which I have come to a conclusion favourable to the principle of your recent financial measures, and it is gratifying to me to find in the papers before me, and especially in the speech of Sir H. Maddock at Kandy, and in the interesting communications of Sir E. Tennent, abundant evidence to show that these disturbances cannot be attributed to anything really oppressive, either in the nature or in the amount of the taxes imposed by the recent ordinances. If, therefore, it is true, as has been asserted, that these ordinances were the immediate cause of the outbreak, they can only have been so in consequence of the studied misrepresentations of their effect which had been deliberately disseminated by European agency and in the native language."

Dr. Elliott, the editor of the Colombo Observer, who has made himself very prominent in this matter, though not directly referred to in these paragraphs, is, perhaps, covertly struck at, and apparently with less reserve in the reply of the Colonial Secretary to a memorial from the Ceylon Chamber of Commerce, in which he observes that "no small portion of the responsibility of the unfortunate disturbances rests with those who have, through the press and by other means, endeavoured to create discontent amongst the native population, and to misrepresent directly to them the measures of the local Government."

This charge was brought more directly against Dr. Elliott in a paper, signed by certain European planters, containing the following statement:—

"We, the undersigned British residents in the Kandian provinces, believing that the late writings in the Observer newspaper, and the course pursued by the editor, have tended greatly to cause the unhappy disturbances and destruction of property we now daily witness, and which threaten, unless speedily checked, to replunge this island into the barbarism and poverty from which British capital and Indian labour have begun to raise it, feel it our duty publicly to record in the strongest terms our disapprobation and abhorrence of the inflammatory tendency of its late productions; and whilst we acknowledge the freedom of the press as one of the strongest bulwarks of our liberty, and one of the greatest blessings of the English constitution, we cannot but deeply lament this unworthy prostitution of its power for the purpose of stirring up amongst the half-civilized natives of the island a factious opposition and disaffection towards her Majesty's Government."

Upon being threatened with an action for libel, however, most of the subscribers (not more than sixteen in all) consented to withdraw their signatures.

Upon the whole, we think there is sufficient ground to conclude that the obnoxious ordinances were not the real, substantial, sole causes of the rebellion: they were, perhaps, only the match which lighted the gunpowder into explosion.

The European reader will wonder why means should not have been taken to counteract the misrepresentations complained of, and to prevent the misguided natives from being made the ready tools of crafty agents. This would not, perhaps, have been easy in any foreign dependency where the people are ignorant and their language is different from that of their rulers; but in Ceylon it was impossible; for it is admitted by Earl Grey, and is too notorious to be denied, that a knowledge of the native languages is not required in the European agents and servants of the government; and his lordship, with an amusing appearance of simplicity, supposes that "the late transactions have brought to light" this "principal fault in the system of government now existing in Ceylon;" namely, the want of a medium of mutual communication between the people and the local governmental authorities, which, one would imagine, must have been the first thing thought of.

Now let English readers ponder well this important fact; that the system of government under which Ceylon has sunk into financial and commercial distress, under which there have been repeated insurrections of the native population, who, in a small island, are easily kept in subjection by a trifling force of Europeans, — this system of government, with all its nepotism, and inherent vices, —is the system which, in the event of British India being transferred wholly to the direct management of the ministers of the Crown, will be applied to that empire. If, as the merchants and planters of Ceylon, in their memorial, affirm as "a notorious fact" be true, that persons incompetent through want of education are placed in high judicial stations in the colony; if it be true, as Sir Wm. Molesworth states, that the appointments there are mere provisions for the adherents and dependants of political leaders at home; can any one doubt that the same abuses, upon a larger and more dangerous scale, would exist in India? The remedy proposed by the baronet for the misgovernment of Ceylon is, "transfer it to the East-India Company, and it will then have a share in the talent and official aptitude specially provided for India;" and some able periodical writers have recently echoed this recommendation. But the reverse will be the case if the Company's government in India be superseded by the

When Ceylon was transferred by the Company to the Crown, it was done with the view of demonstrating the superiority of the latter's system of administration. The island afforded a most favourable theatre for the experiment. Its population, quiet and peaceable, were subject to no intractable caste prejudices; they surrendered their modified slavery and many other of their institutions without repugnance; they fell into our own with alacrity, performing the office of jurors, for example, with admirable skill as well as fidelity. In short, under judicious management, Ceylon might have been made a model for the imitation of continental India; and what has it been made?—a little Ireland!

Court of Queen's Bench, Fas. 24.

The Queen v. Charretie,-Lord Denman delivered the judgment of the Court in this case. The defendant, Colonel Charre-tie, had been indicted under the 49th Geo. III. c. 126, for a misdemeanor in regard to the sale of a cadetship in the East-India Company's service. The indictment charged that the defendant had received a sum of money for a nomination to an office, commission, place, or appointment in the gift of the Directors of the Company. The only question for the Court was, whether a cadetship was proved at the trial to fall under one of those descriptions. It appeared that the money was to be paid for the nomination, which was made in favour of William White Wotherspoon, and for which his father had paid the sum of 2,000l. The numbers on contained a proviso that the party should be declared by the Directors to be nt for the appointment; but this condition was always understood in cases of that kind, and would not prevent the nomination from being considered an office, commission, place, or appointment within the statute. In deciding the question, the Court was bound to look at the intention of the Legislature, and it was clear that the object of the enactment was to prevent all corrupt bargains. It was therefore immaterial to consider whether what was sold was described with critical accuracy. The Court was therefore of opinion that the direction given was right. A cadetship was sufficiently described by each of those words, and the indictment was fully proved.

The rule for a new trial was therefore discharged.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIEUT. GENERAL SIR WILLIAM MAYNARD GOMM, K.C.B., late Governor of the Mauritius, has been appointed Commander-in-Chief in India.

ADVANTAGES OF THIS INSTITUTION.

ECONOMICAL RATES OF PREMIUM computed expressly for the use of the Company, and presenting the means of effecting policies in a great variety of ways, to suit the objects and circumstances of the assured. Among others the two following tables are particularly deserving of attention:—

1. A table of rates (No. II.) whereby little more than half the amount of premium ultimately payable upon the policy is required during the first seven years, without any deduction from the sum assured when the policy becomes a claim.

2. An extensive table of rates (No. V.) for reversionary annuities, presenting to husbands, fathers of families, and others, one of the cheapest and best possible modes of securing, in the event of premature death, a provision for the especial objects of their solicitude.

Complete security afforded to the assured by means of an ample subscribed capital—by the registration of assignments of policies—by the admission of age and interest, during life, where the same have been satisfactorily proved, and by other regulations for facilitating the objects and protecting the interests of all bond fide policy holders.

The following peculiar advantages are offered by this Company:-

1. Their policies cover the risk of living and voyaging over a far larger portion of the globe than do those issued by any other Company in existence. They allow the assured to reside in the Australasian and North American colonies, and at the Cape of Good Hope. They also allow to the assured for the whole of life one passage out and home to any of those colonies. For British India a very moderate extra premium is charged, and the premium is reduced to the English scale on the return of the assured life to England for permanent residence.

the English scale on the return of the assured have a manent residence.

Premiums may be paid, and claims settled at Sydney, where there is a Board of Directors and Trustees; and at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, where there are Agents.

A third of the premiums may remain unpaid for five years; nor it necessary for the maintenance of the Assurance to pay up the premium at the end of that time, but the unpaid thirds may remain as a debt against the policy, if the interest be regularly paid upon them as the renewal premiums fall due.

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR

PINE HEAD of HAIR.—ROW LAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—The extraordinary efficacy and happy amalgamation of its purely exotic materials have rendered it justly renowned throughout the world for its remarkable virtues in nourishing, preserving, and beautifying the human hair, lt insinuates its balsamic properties into the pores of the head, nourishes the hair in its embryo state, accelerates its growth, cleanses it from scurf and dandriff, sustains it in maturity, and continues its possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and huxurious redundancy, to the latest period of human life, lts operation in cases of baldness is peculiarly active; so that, in numerous instances wherein other remedles have been tried in vain, Rowland's Macassar Oil has superseded the ornaments of art, by reinstating, in full plenitude, the permanent gifts and graces of nature. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is also unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair, and rendering the use of the fine comb unnecessary. A small pamphlet accompaniss each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and avice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life. Its invaluable properties have obtained the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the whole of the Royal Family of Great Britain, and of every Court of the clivilized world; and the high esteem in which it is universally held, together with numerous testimonials constantly received of its efficacy, afford the beat and surest proofs of its merits.—Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to 4 small), los. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION—On the wrapper of each bottle of the genuine article are these words, in two lines,—ROW LAND'S MACASSAR OIL. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper reach of heaton cannot an imperate and chemista and Perfumers.—• 9

It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamed, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Howard's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Prepared only by Mr.Thos. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George-st., Hanover-square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 290, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Sartrette, 4, Strand; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and all Medicine Vendors. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

OUSTACHIOS, WHISKERS, or EYEBROWS, at pleasure, by using GRIMSTONE'S AROMATIC REGENERATOR, for promoting and improving the growth of the human hair; the only known specific that will regenerate a new growth of hair. Sold by Sanger, Oxford Street; Barclay and Son, Farringdon Street; and all chemists and medicine venders, in bottles at 4s., 7s., and Ils. each, including a pamphlet of testimonials, and directions for using this essential spirit, drawn from aromatic herbs and flowers. By the application of a few drops to the crown of the head, it will remove the most violent headache in a few initutes. It is a delightly toilest parfume. On the receipt of money orders, a liberal discount to dealers is allowed. The 7s. contains two 4s., the 1ls. four times the quantity of the 4s. Rectall agents appointed on receiving money orders, to William Grimstone, Herbary, Highgate, near London.

INGWORMS, SCORBUTIC AFFECTIONS, AND OTHER SKIN DISEASES, CURABLE BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—In the East Indies, diseases of the skin are very prevalent among the natives, and Holloway's Omment and Pills have been smost successfully used in a variety of cases. The Editor of the Mofussitive instances that of a coolie employed in his establishment, who was afflicted with myriads of ringworms, which defied all the Meerut doctors, and promised to devour the poor man, before he was even under ground. Holloway's Pills and Ointment were then tried, and in a month he was perfectly restored to his former healthy condition and cleanliness of skin.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, Londows; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

In One Volume, royal 8vo. price £2. 12s. 6d.

**** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—viz. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,0% pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborlous book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive partonage.

HINDISTANI GRAMMAR. in the Oriental and Roman

HINDUSTANI GRAMMAR, in the Oriental and Roman Characters, with numerous copper-plate Illustrations of the Pensian and Devanagari Systems of Alphabetic Writing. To which is added, a copious Selection of Easy Extracts for reading in the Persi-Arabic and Devanagari Characters, forming a complete introduction to the Bagh-o-Bahar, together with a Vocabulary and explanatory Notes. By Duncan Forbes, LL.D. 8vo. cloth, 12s.

HINDUSTANI MANUAL: a Pocket Companion for those who visit India in any capacity; intended to facilitate the essential attainments of conversing with fluency, and composing with accuracy, in the most useful of all the languages spoken in our Eastern Empire.—In Two Parts.

PART I.—A compendious Grammar of the Language, with Exercises on its more prominent peculiarities; together with a Selection of useful Phrases, Dialogues, and Subjects for translation into English.

PART II.—A Vocabulary of useful Words, English and Hindustani; shewing at the same time the difference of idiom between the two Languages.

By Dungaw Forbes, LLD.
Second Edition, considerably improved. 18mo. bound, 5s. 6d.

The BAGH-O-BAHAR; consisting of entertaining Tales in the Hindustani Language. A new edition, carefully collated with onginal MSS., having the essential vowel points and punctuation marked throughout. To which is added, a Vocabulary of the Words occurring in the work. By Duncan FORBES, LL.D. Royal 8vo. cloth, 15s.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE anxiety with which this overland mail was expected has been intense; the painful interval gave a stimulus and scope to imagination, which wove many a tale of the possible events it would be charged with, and some of these fictions assumed the shape of realities. Reports of a defeat and of a victory were prevalent in the City two days prior to the arrival of the mail. The intelligence will disappoint many, for beyond the facts, which are undoubtedly consolatory and favourable,—that the British army upon the Jelum is not in a worse condition than the preceding accounts left it in, but rather a better; that the enemy has evinced symptoms of a sense of defeat, having taken no steps to force further hostilities; that he does not appear to have been joined by any reinforcements, whilst fresh troops are pressing forwards to the British camp, from Mooltan on one side, and from Lahore and the Jullundur doab on the other; and above all, that the result of the battle of Chillianwallah seems to have made no impression inauspicious to British interests in the Punjab or in other parts of India, which is represented as "everywhere tranquil;"-beyond these facts, this mail conveys few materials that can administer food to impatient curiosity.

It appears that the army of the Punjab and that of Shere Singh remained, at the latest date of the advices from Lord Gough's camp, the 3rd February, in their former positions, about 5 miles apart; Lord Gough at Chillianwallah, fortifying his camp, as if he either expected an attack, or intended to wait for the large reinforcements on their march; the Sikh sirdar at Rassool, where, it is said, he had 30,000 men,-one-third, however, being "in the highest degree irregular." The reinforcements on their way to join Lord Gough, 19,000 troops in all (including five additional European regiments), will make the British force on the Jelum 40,000 men, with an immense artillery. Chuttur Singh (who is said to be incapacitated by infirmity for active functions), and Akram Khan, a son of Dost Mahomed Khan, had visited Shere Singh's camp, without bringing any accession of troops; and on the 28th January, Lieutenant Bowie, a prisoner in the hands of Chuttur Singh, came on parole to the British camp, as the bearer of some proposals from Shere Singh. If these overtures were sent after the arrival of either of the two personages above named, they denote a general sense of the desperate condition of their cause, which may, perhaps, terminate this hitherto sanguinary war without a further effusion of blood. Lord Gough,-doubtless with the advice of Major Mackeson, the political agent of the Governor-General,-is reported to have declined listening to any terms short of unconditional surrender: but this is, probably, insisted and an armonder.

of honour, the lives of the Sikh insurance of honour, and they could not eximmunity by negotiation.

A slight affair took place on the 30th January, a party of the enemy, on the look-out for our camels, having been fallen in with and cut up by our irregular horse, under Lieutenant Chamberlain. The commander of the Sikh artillery, Elahee Buksh, who came over to us after the late battle, is represented to have proved himself a valuable auxiliary, attesting his sincerity in our cause by the vigour of his exertions to procure supplies and intelligence, which his knowledge of the country greatly facilitated. Rumours were afloat, that bodies of Affghans, under the command of three Europeans, formerly privates in H.M.'s 44th regiment, who had remained in Cabul on its evacuation, and become Mahomedans, had appeared in the hill country beyond the Jelum; but none had crossed to the left bank. It had also been reported in the camp that Shere Singh had despatched a strong detachment of his troops down the right bank of the river, to meet our force advancing from Mooltan; but it is extremely improbable that, in the face of Lord Gough's army, he should have weakened himself by sending more than a small party of observation. A detachment of Shere Singh's cavalry had marched to intercept one of our convoys moving from Goojerat, in the rear of the British camp, a design which was frustrated by the advance of Colonel King, with a strong party of cavalry and artillery, who brought the convoy in safety to camp.

The weather at Chillianwallah was very favourable; the wounded were doing well; the troops were healthy, and were, it is added, "regaining their spirits after the late disastrous triumph."

It is expected that, after the junction of the reinforcements, Lord Gough will fight another battle, after which the army will prepare to go into quarters, as Peshawur, Attok, the Hazarch country, and Bunnoo, can scarcely be reduced and garrisoned before next cold season.

The body of Golab Singh's troops, under Colonel Steinbach, respecting whose movements so much anxiety has been felt, had taken no decisive step, but remained at Meerpore, on the extreme verge of that Maharajah's territories, near where the Jelum forms their boundary, a point most convenient for acting as circumstances required or policy suggested.

Major Lawrence had been permitted to join his family at the fort of Sukkoo, where, it is said, they had been treated with "much consideration and kindness."

The papers contain very copious details respecting the siege and capture of the fort of Mooltan, which are inserted in a subsequent page. The picturesque description of the surrender—the procession of 3,500 hardy, stalwart warriors, followed by the ex-dewan and his chiefs, the former moving with calm dignity along the street of British troops, conscious that, though defeated, he was not degraded, and that he had not lost honour with liberty, will be perused with deep interest. We subjoin from another source (a correspondent of the Englishman) a portrait of the personal appearance of Moolraj:—

"I should imagine Moolraj is about thirty-three years old, if not more, and he stands about 5 feet 7 inches. He has small limbs, light colour, tolerable countenance, high forehead, small deep eyes, a good nose and mouth, thoughtful expression, in which deepair and dignity seem deeply blended, which made him look grave and melancholy, though stern—so now you can work up your imagination and fancy 'the valiant assessin of Mooltan.' He was mounted on a nice small horse, with a scarlet silk cloth spread under the saddle. He wore an orange silk cloak and coloured turban. His head military officer rode in his rear, two European soldiers, one on each side; Major Becher on his right. There was nothing showy or dazzling about him, and he spoke or recognized no one, but looked twice at the soldiers on each side with apparent dislike, though I did not observe a feature ruffled."

It will be seen from the details given elsewhere, that the property found in the fort is estimated at above a million sterling, which is to be made over to the Durbar, nominally, it being due to us, in part payment of expenses, and will, therefore, go at once into the British treasury. The city had been ransomed for 200,000l.: this sum, it is asserted, the Governor-General had decided, would go to the captors, as prize. It will be further seen that, when the fort was entered by our troops, disgraceful scenes of plunder ensued. This is one of the evils of war which are most easily dealt with, and it is surprising that so barbarous a practice, so demoralizing to the troops, and so fruitful of suffering to the innocent inhabitants, should not, long ere this, have been abrogated with other antiquated horrors.

The bodies of Messrs. Vans Agnew and Anderson were found near the spot where they had fallen, some Affghan merchants having given their unmutilated corpses burial according to the rites of their country. They were borne through the breach by the men of the Fusiliers—Anderson's own regiment—and buried with military honours in the fort; the gallant corps to which the brave young officer belonged, and which was at Kurrachee, 600 miles away, when the murders of April occurred, having been the first to enter the town on the mission of vengeance. The following account of the ceremony is from the pen of an officer with the force:—

"On the evening of the 26th, I joined in a very pleasing, though melancholy ceremony. The burial-place of Mr. Agnew and Lieut. Anderson had been discovered, and it was determined to exhume the bodies, and move them to the fort. The grave was opened under the superintendence of one of their most intimate friends, and the bodies were found to be in a sufficient state of preservation to be identified. A carrying and funeral party, with the band of the Fusiliers, to which regiment Lieut. Anderson formerly belonged, attended, with a large portion of the officers in camp, and moved off from the Eedgah, near which the bodies had been found, at five o'clock, and, entering the Fort by the breach, the coffins were deposited in a grave which had been prepared in the highest part of the Fort. The Chaplain was in attendance, and read the funeral service in a most impressive manner."

The fate of these gentlemen will be chronicled in the memories of the Mooltanis by the ruin it has brought upon heir renowned fort and city. Moolraj, however, is said to be in possession of evidence establishing his innocence of all concern in the murder of these gentlemen.

The movement of the troops from Mooltan to join Lord Gough commenced on the 27th January, and ultimately the whole of the forces marched, in two columns, under Major-General Whish and Brigadier-General Dundas, for Ramnuggur, where Lord Gough's camp was supposed to be, and which they would reach about the 20th February. The details of their march will be found in a succeeding column. It is said that General Whish's force was to take, on its way up, a fort called Chuneout, occupied by Narain Singh. Moolraj was to accompany this force as far as Ramnuggur, whence he was to be sent to Lahore. He was in charge of Lieutenant Henry.

The troops left at Mooltan consist of a company of European artillery, two companies of Golundauze, a light field battery, the 1st Lancers, a company of Sappers and Miners, and two regiments (the 4th and 9th) of native infantry.

The Delhi Gazette states that Lieutenant Pearse, of the Madras Artillery, had reached the Payloo Pass, with 1,500 men and six guns, in support of Lieutenant R. Taylor, who was still at Lukkee; while Lieutenant Pollock, with 2,000 men and five guns, had made six marches to join him. Lieutenant J. Young, of the Engineers, was to proceed to join the Bunnoo forces on the 1st of February.

The conduct of the 14th Light Dragoons has formed a subject of painful discussion in the papers, in which, as might be expected, partisans appear on both sides. A letter in defence of the regiment appears in the Mofussilite, from whence we extract the following passages, which make matters, upon the whole, rather worse:

"Why has this gallant corps been singled out from all the regiments composing Pope's brigade, when the 9th Lancers and the 1st and 6th Light Cavalry were united with the 14th Dragoons on the 13th of January, in a line of two deep—when the right and centre regiments were the first to obey the order to retire by 'threes about,' were the first to break—when the 14th, which was the last to retire, was the first to rally—and when the other regiments, on the right and centre, went three times the distance to the rear the 14th Dragoons did? The officers of the 6th Light Cavalry and about 30 of their men formed up with the 14th, and have vouched and will again vouch, for this fact. No regiment went about until ordered, and the 14th received the command from Brigadier Pope, whose ingenuity could devise or conceive no other movement to the rear but by the word 'Threes about.' The 14th Dragoons were never ordered to charge at all on the 13th, and could not, as they only formed part of a line of cavalry. Brigadier Pope halted the line of cavalry when he caught the first glimpse of the enemy, and never gave a single word of command, although requested to do so by the officer commanding the 14th Dragoons—who was rendered powerless by his position, with all the senior officers of native cavalry—except the command to go 'threes about,' which occasioned the confusion in the absence of either skirmishers to protect the rear, or a reserve to rally upon in retiring. Why were the guns placed in the rear of the cavalry by Brigadier Pope, when in firing they would kill his own troops? they were worse than useless there; and this against remonstrance and entreaty. It looks like trying to sacrifice a regiment to save a brigadier, when the fact is, that the 14th Dragoons were rallied by their own officers, one of whom was killed and the other wounded trying to save Captain Huish, not 800 yards from where they went about, as soon as they discovered that a panic had been created by their being, when in front of their own guns, commanded to retire by a word which would necessarily tend to insure disorder in a jungle, and increase the difficulty of such a position. fusion was created by a sick old man, who chanced to get hurt, and who was, I believe, in the novel position of commanding a cavalry brigade in action, and never having been under fire before in his life. Nothing better can be expected while such a piece of decrepitude is placed in command of a cavalry brigade, or rather, while such a system exists as will permit a man weighed down with years, illness, and infirmity, who cannot mount or dismount a horse unless assisted by three or four men and a chair, to command her Majesty's Dragoons and Lancers, for the first time in his life, before the enemy in the field. A rheumatic, aged, decrepit Light Dragoon is a contradiction of terms, and would be as loudly ridiculed in Europe as if the troops of flying artillery were led at a review by the Chelsea pensioners."

Amongst the speculations, announced as authentic facts, relating to the distribution of the Punjab territory, is one which states that the portion of the Punjab to be annexed is to be from Mooltan to the Bhimbur Pass, and from the pass, skirting the hills, down to Kot Kangra; that Attok is to be the frontier, with a strong garrison; and that Peshawur and the country across the Indus is to be given to Dost Mahomed; that we are not to take either the Huzareh or the Bunnoo country, or the valley of the Jelum, as those districts would not pay the expenses of holding them; but we are to keep the Salt range!

The Governor-General had moved from Mukkoo to Perozepore on the 27th January.

The papers of the presidencies contain no local news of the slightest interest.

The intelligence from China is likewise bare of interest. At Canton, the Chinese merchants are said to be looking forward with anxiety to the 1st of April, when the question of entering the city ought to be settled in the terms of the agreement with Sir John Davis. The impression was, that Seu, the Imperial Commissioner, would refuse to comply with the agreement entered into by his predecessor, Keying, and that the gates would not be opened.

The mail has brought a petition from the inhabitants of Hong Kong to the House of Commons, in which they complain of their heavy burthens, and pray that measures may be adopted for improving their commercial relations with China, and ameliorating the condition of the inhabitants of the island; that a part of the expenditure for the settlement should be charged against the revenue derived by the imperial exchequer from the China trade; and that "a share in the administration of the ordinary and local affairs of the island, should be given by some system of municipal government, to the British residents."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

(Supplement to the London Gazette of 6th March.)

India Board, March 7, 1849.

The following despatches, relating to military operations which have taken place, at various dates, in the Punjaub, have been, from time to time, received at the East-India House, and are now made public:—

A letter from Major-Gen. Whish, commanding Mooltan Field Force, to the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated "Camp, Mooltan, Sept. 9, 1848," reports that the working parties, the previous day, had made good progress; that at the village of Ramteerut, which was taken possession of on the 7th, batteries had been erected; that the enemy had been troublesome that morning and the preceding day, and that Lieut. Drew, 8th N. I., had been slightly wounded.

Major-Gen. Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Sept. 10, 1848.

Capt. Abercrombie, of the engineers, having called upon me yesterday evening, on the part of the chief engineer, to request my sanction to dislodge the enemy from a position apparently similar to the one near it, that they were easily driven from on the 8th inst., I acceded to it, with the view to prevent the party about to be employed in an advanced trench towards it, from molesta-The field officer of the trenches, Lieut. Col. Pattoun, H. M.'s 32nd regt., accordingly proceeded with detachments of H. M.'s 10th foot and 49th and 72nd N.I., subsequently joined by two guns of Gen. Cortland's artillery, that were near at hand, and attacked the enemy's position with great gallantry and perseverance; but it was so much stronger than the one above adverted to in its vicinity, having a strong loop holed building within it, that after encountering great loss (which by the intelligence received this morning from the city was equally experienced by the enemy), the detachment was withdrawn, and our casualty list, which had up to yesterday evening been so small, had, I regret to say, on this occasion, an addition of 16 killed, 71 wounded, and 4 missing. Officers wounded: Lieut. Hollinsworth, 10th Foot, severely; Lieut. and Adj. Richardson, 49th N. I., ditto, and Lieut. Irwin, 49th N. I., dangerously.

The chief engineer, thinking it now preferable to turn their position, instead of taking it immediately, I early this morning directed four 5½-inch mortars to be brought to bear upon it, in addition to the three 8-inch mortars at 600 yards from it, on the left of Ramteerut, which will, I trust, secure the object with the least possible further risk. I regret to add that Brigadier Markham passed me in the trenches at 6 a.m., wounded by a ball through the thigh, but which having been extracted, I trust I may safely calculate upon his early recovery.

I have not yet received Col. Pattoun's official report, and do not like to wait for it, the above being from what he stated rivations to me, and from the returns since received of casualties from corps.

Major-Gen. Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp. Mooltan. Sept. 12, 1848.

Camp, Mooltan, Sept. 12, 1848. Referring you to my letter of the 10th inst., I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that, thinking the bombardment of the enemy's position must have been effectual, I directed, at noon yesterday, that a shell should only be thrown into it once hourly, having, from my observations at an early hour, satisfied myself that it must be taken without delay. At noon yesterday the chief engineer and commanding officer of artillery waited upon me, when the former apprized me of his having ascertained that the enemy were in great force in its vicinity; but the wind was so boisterous and the dust so troublesome, the weather seemed averse to our moving then, and it was put off. At 2 A.M. to-day, Major Napier again called, with a confirmation of his former information, at which hour we had a promise of a repetition of yesterday's dust-storm; but at 4 A.M., finding it was clearing up, I issued the division order, of which I inclose a copy; and, being pressed for time, I can only add, that my sanguine expectations were more than realized, of which I hope to give the particulars to-morrow. The total of which I hope to give the particulars to-morrow. the casualty list will not, I trust, prove heavy; but I have heard with unfeigned regret of the death of Col. Pattoun and Quartermaster Taylor, of H.M.'s 32nd regt.; Major Montizambert, of H.M.'s 10th regt., and Ens. Lloyd, of the 8th N.I.

(Then follow Division Orders.)

Camp, Moultan, Sept. 13, 1848.

In continuation of my letter of yesterday's date, I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that the columns, formed agreeably to the division orders, of which a copy was forwarded yesterday, advanced to the attack at 8\frac{1}{2} a.M., part of Lieut. Edwardes's force being previously engaged with the enemy on our left. The position was a strong one, and stoutly defended; the conflict terminating only in a series of hand-to-hand encounters. A troop of horse artillery, under Capt. Mackenzie, was brought up at an opportune moment, and prevented an accession of numbers to the enemy, who were repulsed with severe loss in about an hour and a half. I have the honour to inclose a list of casualties on this occasion, and on the night of the 9th inst., in the previous attack on this post, wherein Capt. Christopher, of the Indian Navy, was severely wounded.

The late Col. Pattoun, who commanded the attack on that occasion, reports that Capt. Christopher rendered him valuable assistance in bringing up supports from the rear intrenchment.

The wounded, I am happy to say, are progressing very favourably, by the field surgeon's report.

(Then follows a General Casualty Return in the operations on the 9th and 12th September, viz., total 39 killed, 216 wounded, and 4 missing.)

Officers Killed.—Lieut. Col. Pattoun, H.M.'s 32nd regt.; Major Montizambert, H.M.'s 10th Foot; Lieut. Cubitt, 49th N.I., Ens. Lloyd, 8th N.I.; and Qr. Mast. Taylor, H.M.'s 32nd Foot.

Officers Wounded. — Capt. MacGregor, H.M.'s 10th Foot, severely; Lieut. Herbert, H.M.'s 10th Foot, severely; Capt. Balfour, H.M.'s 32nd Foot, dangerously; Capt. King, H.M.'s 32nd Foot, slightly; Lieut. Birtwhistle, H.M.'s 32nd Foot, slightly; Lieut. Bunny, H.Art., slightly; Capt. Wroughton, 8th N.I., slightly; Lieut. Turnbull, 8th N.I., slightly; Lieut. Hollinsworth, H.M.'s 10th Foot, severely; Lieut. Richardson, 49th N.I., severely; Lieut. Irwin, 49th N.I., severely.

Major-Gen. Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Nov. 7, 1848. (Extract.)

I intimated yesterday that I should most probably consider it my duty to attack the enemy's position this morning.

At 4 P.M. I issued the Division Order of which I beg to forward a copy, and at the same time explained to the brigadiers and officers in command the mode of attack I proposed adopting, viz., 1st. the British force to be drawn up at 6 A.M. precisely on the eastern side of the Grand Canal that flanks Lieut. Edwardes's camp at Sooraj Khoond. The infantry columns to make a detour to the right, to take the enemy's position in flank, and the cavalry and horse artillery to make a corresponding movement, and on nearing the enemy to act according to circumstances.

2nd. The allies to move forward when directed by Lieut. Edwardes up the western side of the canal, taking especial care that none of them cross to the eastern side, while the British force is engaged with the enemy.

At 2 a.m. to-day, I learnt with much surprise and regret that several hundred of one of the three regular regiments of the Sikh service that was occupying for the night our advanced position (our siege guns having first been withdrawn from it), had gone over to the enemy, and that the 300 Rohillas, with Lieut. Bunny's two horse artillery guns remaining, might prove inadequate, which led to my immediately sending on our piquets to their aid. At about 3 a.m. Lieut. Edwardes came to me, as did other officers. The former, after what had taken place, could not be answerable for his troops performing the duty assigned to them yesterday, but said that a victory would have a most salutary effect upon them. I then modified my plan as regarded the west side of the canal, and agreed that measures there should only be defensive, unless the allies should show a readiness to give effect to the whole of it, and which I am happy to say they did, after gallantly repulsing at 8 a.m. a severe attack made on them by the enemy with all his disposable force.

At 10 a.m. our infantry reached their destination in echelon of brigades, right in front, and were duly supported by the horse artillery and cavalry in carrying the enemy's position and capturing the greater part of his guns, which was effected within an hour, with the small loss of two or three killed, and twelve or fourteen wounded; no officer being among the casualties.

The defection of one of the Sikh regiments made me think it most desirable that I should not leave camp, and as our cavalry here were to be for the day increased by 1,000 of the horse of our allies, I requested Brigadier Salter to remain also. On several accounts I was averse to delay the attack, and I trust that, independent of its complete success, it will meet with his Lordship's approval.

(Then follows the Division Order.)

Camp, Mooltan, Nov. 9, 1848.
Referring you to my letter of the 7th instant, I have now the Referring you to my letter of the 7th instant, I have now the satisfaction of forwarding, for submission to the Commander-in-Chief, Brigadier Markham's letter of yesterday, detailing the particulars of the gallant and successful attack made on the strong position of the enemy (on the eastern side of the Grand Canal), by the troops placed under his command, on the morning of the 7th inst., to which I have attached the documents noted in the margin. The enemy was in strong force on the west side of the canal, but had no guns there, and I never considered the number of them at his main position (on the eastern bank) to exceed six; one of which they began to draw off on first seeing our force, but apparently, primarily, for the purpose of enflading our infantry as they drew near, in which they were disappointed by the rapid advance of our cavalry and horse artillery, under Major Wheler and Capt. Anderson, which led to the gun on the right being hurried towards the town, and to the capture of the remainder, which was ensured by the steady advance and brilliant byyonet charge on the enemy's batteries, in which the native infantry most nobly vied with their European comrades.

From my letter of the 7th inst. to your address, your Lordship will learn that I remained in camp. When I decided on so doing, it was impossible for me to conjecture to what extent the force of the allies might prove faithless, and Lieut. Edwardes could not at that time give me any encouragement to indulge in auspicious forebodings; but, providentially, everything of an untoward aspect or character was overruled for good, and a day that commenced in gloom ended most joyfully. I regret having to notice that our casualty list annexed to Brigadier Markham's report was increased on his force coming back, several men having been wounded by a few of the enemy having so far recovered their spirits as to fire their matchlocks and jingalls from behind the walls and trees at a considerable distance off. The wounds, in general, his Lordship will rejoice to learn, are slight.

In the vicinity of camp, on the 7th inst., there was not much to do. Foujdar Khan, with 1,000 horse from Lieut. Edwardes's camp, joined the cavalry under Brigadier Salter, and advanced near the Shesh Mahal, as a body of the enemy's cavalry were in that neighbourhood. This gave Lieut. Graham (who had two guns of the 4th troop 1st brigade horse artillery) an opportunity of firing a few rounds of shrapnels amongst them, which induced them to retire till they were under the fire of the fort, when Brigadier Salter recalled our party.

It would be unjust to conclude without particularly bringing to the notice of the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief the steady and soldierlike conduct of Lieut. Bunny, of the horse artillery, and Lieut. Pollock (49th N. I.), assistant resident, on the 7th inst. The former had his two guns at our advanced post in battery, and the latter commanded the detachment of the troops of the allies there, of which a large portion went over to the enemy at 2 A.M., increasing his strength probably to 1,200, and in entrenchment not 300 yards off.

The cavalry detail, under Capt. Mulcaster, that was attached to the guns (but at some distance, to be out of the range of those of the enemy), was soon with them, but it took the picquets a considerable time to join, and the enemy, fully aware of their position and circumstances, might have made a serious attack on the post, with great promise of success, but the above officers remained firm, and gave confidence to the small details with them to continue a similar course.

Brigadier F. Markham, commanding 2nd brigade 1st Infantry Division, Army of the Punjaub, to Major Gen. Whish Camp, Mooltan, Nov. 8, 1848.

I have the honour to report for your information, that, according to the arrangements made on the morning of the 7th inst, I proceeded with the force under my command, as per margin, across the bridges over the nullah, on the right of the allied camp in the Sooraj Khoond, in open column, flanking the enemy's position, brought our shoulders forward to the left, proceeding directly across their rear. When we had advanced sufficiently far to insure overlapping the most distant part of their position, we wheeled into line, three guns on the right, three on the left, the whole of the cavalry (with the exception of a small party with the guns) on our right flank, between the line and Sultan Sudoola Gardens. The reserve, in quarter-distance column, in rear of the centre of the right brigade, advanced steadily in echelon of brigade, at fifty paces distant from the right, under a smart fire of grape and round shot. At this moment I ordered the cavalry to attack a large body of the enemy who were moving to our right, and to prevent their removing their guns.

Major Wheler, in command of the cavalry, advanced in the most brilliant manner, charged the enemy, cutting up numbers of them, taking a standard, and preventing the removal of the guns, swept the whole of our front, and re-forming speedily, and in good order, on our left, moved off to cover the right. As the cavalry cleared our front, the horse artillery opened their fire, the line charged, and took the position, with the whole of the guns, on the bank of the nullah, driving the enemy across and up it, with considerable loss. Our own loss in the whole affair (which lasted, from the time we wheeled into line till the enemy were completely routed, about an hour) being, as you will perceive by the accompanying returns, comparatively small. then destroyed their batteries, and returned to camp.

The conduct of everybody, officers and men, was beyond all To all I have to return my most sincere thanks for the manner in which my orders were carried out. To Lieut. Col. Franks and Lieut. Col. Brooke, in command of brigades, for their cordial support. To Lieut. Col. Young, Major Farquharson, Major Finnis, Major Inglis, Major Lloyd, and Capt. Jamieson, for the steady manner in which they led their regiments into To Major Wheler, in command of the cavalry, and to Capt. Anderson, in command of the horse artillery, my warmest thanks are due. To Major Napier, chief engineer, who accompanied me throughout the day, I am indebted more than I can express. Capt. Abercrombie, who attended me personally, and to the engineer officers who were attached to officers in command of brigades, and to the officers in charge of sappers and pioneers, I have to thank for the ready assistance which they afforded. To Major Becher, assist. qu. mast. gen., my thanks are also due. To Capt. Kennedy, aide.de-camp to the major general, who accompanied me in that capacity during the whole affair, I beg to convey my fullest sense of the service he rendered.

The casualties in the attack on the enemy's position under Brig. Markham were 3 killed, 57 wounded.

Ordnance captured 5 brass guns.)

Brevet-Major T. Wheler, commanding the Cavalry and Horse Artillery, in the Column of Attack, to Capt. A. S. Balfour Major of Brigade. Camp, Mooltan, Nov. 7, 1848. Major of Brigade.

For the information of Brig. Markham, I have the honour to report the operations of the cavalry and the horse artillery (detail as per margint) commanded by me, and placed under his orders for the attack on the enemy this morning.

After the brigadier had detached two guns and a squadron of cavalry to the left, and placed the remainder of the guns on the right of the infantry, I drew up the cavalry on the right of all.

Shortly after we had advanced, I received a message delivered by Capt. Kennedy, aide-de-camp, from the brigadier, suggesting the possibility of the cavalry cutting off some horsemen who were gradually retiring from our front, and the front of the infan-At this moment we were getting clear of the jungle on to an open piece of ground; and besides the horsemen above alluded to, I saw to our right front a body of the enemy with a standard, a mass of his cavalry in and around some small villages, a little further retired, on tolerably good ground, and his batteries in the distance. I at once made up my mind to charge the whole, and well the officers and men responded to the call. With a cheer they charged with the utmost precision and rapidity, carrying all before them; but rapid and good as the charge was in itself, it was by great good fortune so timed as to be of essential service, for some of the squadrons charged immediately in the rear of the enemy's guns, preventing the line of infantry from being enfiladed. More than this, the enemy's mass of cavalry, not being apparently aware of our proximity, were stag-gered by the sudden advance, and never made a stand in a body, though parties of them showed a good front till we were in amongst them. Some squadrons charged repeatedly, while others only charged once, but effectually prevented the guns from being carried off, though the attempt was made. Lieut.

Vibart, 1 Ith Lt. Cav., captured a standard.

Where all behaved nobly it were invidious to make distinctions. I shall therefore satisfy myself with bringing to the brigadier's notice how much I am indebted to Capt. I. Inglis, commanding 11th Lt. Cav.; Capt. Master, commanding 11th Irreg. Cav.; and Lieut. Graham, commanding detail 7th Irreg. Cav. To Capt. J. Anderson, commanding 4th troop 3rd brigade Horse Art., Brig. Markham will understand how much we owe, and how difficult it must be for me to describe his movements after he advanced with his four guns, simultaneously with the cavalry; but to me it seemed that, whether in the attack, or in dispersing parties of the enemy which attempted to re-form, or in the eventual retirement, his guns were always judiciously placed, and well served.

Lieut. Taylor, of the engineers, was kind enough to act as my staff on this occasion, and charged by my side.

The brigadier will be happy to learn from the accompanying casualty roll, that our loss in men is absolutely nothing, although the enemy, turning their guns, fired rounds of grape into us as we advanced, or rather as we closed on them—fortunately hitting only the horses.

Major-Gen. Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Nov. 12, 1848.

(Extract.)

Within these two days I have received from Lieuts, Edwardes and Lake documents which, in justice to the parties concerned, I think it right to forward to you, for submission to the Commander-in-Chief.

His Lordship will observe that, from the 31st ultimo, when the enemy first made their appearance in the vicinity of the camp of the allies, until the 6th instant inclusive, their loss was 37 killed and 144 wounded; and in the action of Soors, Khoond, on the 7th instant, it was-killed, 39 men; wounded, 172 men.

When I wrote my letter of the 9th instant, I was not aware that 2nd-Lieut. Paton, of engineers, was on duty at our advanced post, after the defection of the Sikh regular regiment there. He was one of the several individuals who reported the circumstance to me (at about 2 A.M.), but I am glad to be enabled to associate the above officer with Lieuts. Bunny and Pollock, as highly deserving of being brought to his Excellency's notice.

Major H. B. Edwardes, C.B., to Major Gen. Whish. Camp, Sooraj Khoond, Nov. 8, 1818.

I have the honour to report, for your information, such details of the action of 7th November as concerned the Irregular Auxiliary Force under command of myself and Lieut. Lake.

2. You will remember that it was decided at the meeting of staff officers in your tent, between 4 and 6 a.m. on 7th November, that as about half of one of Gen. Courtlandt's regular regiment had deserted to the enemy during the night from the battery in front of your camp, it was not advisable to risk entrusting to the Irregular Force that part of the British attack for which they had been told off over night, while at the same time an immediate victory was deemed so indispensable as to require a single attack by the British column, which was finally arranged to come off at 10 A.M.

3. I left your tent at about half-past six, and had scarcely reached my own before a sharp musketry fire opened at our advanced battery on the nullah, and, growing hotter and hotter, soon proved to be an open attack upon that post by the rebels, in such force as at one time to drive completely back the 500 Pathans who held it, and turn the inner flank of the 8 gun battery at the well, 400 yards in front of our camp. The conduct of the gunners at this trying moment deserves mention. drew back their guns from the embrasures, and bringing them to bear on the enemy issuing from the nullah, discharged grape so rapidly among them as to check the attack. It was only transferred, however, to the bed and banks of the nullah; and though I poured reinforcements on the point, the enemy also received such accessions of numbers that I deemed it right to let you know that the issue was doubtful, and an immediate diversion necessary.

- 4. Scarcely, however, had Dr. Cole taken you this message, when Gen. Courtlandt called on his other two irregular regiments to prove themselves free from the treachery of the Kuttar Mookhee Pultan, a call readily answered by several companies leaping over their entrenchments. Mr. Quin, my writer, as usual, led them on, and received a spent round shot in his chest as he mounted the nullah; but one rib only was slightly injured. A close hand-to-hand conflict ensued in the nullah; but a large body of Daoodpootras belonging to the army of Nawab Bahawul Khan at this moment gave such timely assistance that the tide was turned, and, after a sharp fight of about half an hour, the rebels were expelled from the nullah, and in full retreat upon their own intrenchments, up to which they were chased by the
- 5. This successful repulse completely counterbalanced the effect of the defection of the Kuttar Mookhee; and when (in a shorter time than we could have expected) your column came down to the rescue, I was able to promise Brig. Markham, that when he had made his detour and closed with the enemy's left flank on the east of the nullah, our force should assist him by taking that share of the attack which was assigned it over Accordingly, when, after a lengthened flank movement, through the broken ground, most beautifully executed by the British troops, and watched from the high banks of the canal by all our irregulars with enthusiasm and admiration, the brigades deployed upon the rebel flank, we waited to give only one hearty cheer to the cavalry, as they charged Moolraj's Ghoorchurralis, and then ourselves formed into line and advanced up the west side of the nullah to the right of the enemy's entrenchment, in itself a most difficult position, but carried with feeble resistance, in consequence of the rebels being disheartened by one repulse already, and distracted by the British attack upon their left, which they had formerly deemed impregnable.

6. I regret to say that the head of the British line reached the east side of the nullah, as our Irregulars arrived at the passage in the canal, which connected the entrenchments on the east and west, and a party of Sheikh Emamoodeen's Rohillas, disregarding in the heat of the action the orders they had received to keep on their own side of the nullah, crossed over, and had captured a gun on the eastern bank, when they were mis-taken by the sepoys for Moolraj's troops, and two were shot down before the error could be explained.

7. I deem it my duty to bring to your notice the noble conduct of a private of H.M.'s 32nd Foot, who at this juncture, perceiving what was going on, leaped down the canal, and putting himself in front of my Pathans, faced the British troops, and waved his chacko on the end of his bayonet as the signal to cease firing. Thus many friendly lives were saved. The name of this brave man is Howell.

8. It is only justice for me to mention that Lieut. Lake, in command of the Daoodpootras, and Lieut. Pollock and Mr. Hugo James, at the head of the regular regiments, led their men over, and into, the enemy's works before Gen. Courtlandt could extricate the artillery from the water cuts in our front, so that the position was carried without a round shot being fired.

9. Dewan Chirkunder Mull, in civil charge of the Nawab's army, was present throughout the fight. Sheikh Emamoodeen behaved very well with his men, as did also Dewan Jowahir Mull.

10. The whole of my cavalry was along with your reserve troop of horse artillery on the right rear of the enemy, and I trust gave you satisfaction.

11. Our loss on this day was, I regret to say, severe (39 killed, and 172 wounded), and during the cannonade from the rebel intrenchment from the 1st to the 6th November, 37 killed and 144 wounded. The patient fortitude with which this annoying fire day and night was endured, until the fitting moment for action arrived, was very creditable to an irregular force.

12. I cannot close this report without acknowledging the indefatigable services of Mr. Assist. Surg. Cole, who has, since July last, had upwards of 400 wounded men of this force under his hands, and won gratitude and admiration for European medical skill in many a mountain home on the banks of the Indus. His humanity, however, was perhaps never more conspicuous than yesterday, when he saved the lives of many wounded Sikhs upon the field.

Lieut, E. J. Lake, commanding the troops of the Nawab of Bahawulpore to Major General Whish.

Camp, Sooraj Khoond, Nov. 9, 1848.

As by the plan of attack determined upon by you against Moolraj's entrenched position, the duty of protecting the British advanced post during the night of the 6th devolved upon the irregular force, I proceeded at 9 r.m. to that post to make arrangements for its occupation. The party told off for this duty were 500 of Lieut. Edwardes's Irregulars, the Kuttar Mookhee regiment, and 1,000 of the Bahawulpore troops, all under the command of Lieut. Pollock. It was midnight before this party was properly posted, and as the enemy were then perfectly quiet, I returned to camp in order that I might be present with the main body of my troops during the contemplated attack of the 7th. For an account of what occurred after my departure, I must refer you to Lieut. Pollock. I must, however, express my satisfaction at the conduct of the Bahawulpore detachment, who, when they found themselves deserted by large numbers of the Kuttar Mookhee, not only showed no inclination to abandon their post, but repelled an attack made upon them by the Sikhs. This I attribute to Lieut. Pollock's gallant conduct, who was with them on this trying occasion, and by his example restored confidence to all parties.

2. The defection of the Kuttar Mookhee soldiers became generally known by daylight on the 7th, and produced a very disheartening effect upon the whole of the Nawab's army. Some of his officers counselled an immediate retreat and separation from the rest of the irregular force. At this juncture Moolraj's troops made an attack upon our advanced post; our own men gave way; the reinforcements I ordered to their support did not move with alacrity; our main position seemed to be in imminent danger; when some of General Courtlandt's guns opened grape upon the enemy's advancing column, upon whom at the same time a flanking fire was brought from a party of Daood-pootras I sent across the nullah. The enemy, who had hitherto advanced, now halted, when a simultaneous rush made by some Robillahs, and some companies of Gen. Courtlandt's regiments, decided the struggle, and the rebels fled in confusion to their own trenches.

3. When at a later hour the British troops had crossed the nullah in front of our camp and advanced to the attack, the Bahawulpore army also moved down with the remainder of the irregular force and occupied the trenches of the enemy directly in their front. They met with little or no resistance.

4. During the day the Bahawulpore army suffered a loss of 5 killed and 38 wounded; of these, the greater number of casualties occurred during the attack on our own camp.

5. On this occasion, as on every other, I derived the greatest assistance from Peer Ibrahim Khan, the native agent. I feel I cannot speak too highly of his exertions, not only on the 7th, but for six days preceding.

6. It would be out of place to bring to your notice the conduct of those of the Nawab's officers who distinguished themselves on this occasion; I cannot, however, omit mentioning that during the attack on our camp, Dewan Chabunda Mull, the Nawab's chief officer, behaved with the greatest courage and presence of mind.

Major-General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 27, 1848.

My letters of late will, in great measure, have prepared the Commander-in-Chief for my resuming operations on being joined by the Bombay column, in the mode specified in the accompanying copy of my field-force order of yesterday. columns on the left, that is, towards the Seedee loll-ke-bed, left and right sides of the Mundee Awa, were to be only of demonstration, unless the resistance of the enemy, simultaneously assailed in various parts of their strong entrenchments, encouraged their becoming (as I confidently hoped they would be) real attacks; which otherwise was only to be characteristic of the 4th (or right) column; which half-an-hour later was to carry the brick-kilns, village of Wuzeerabad, and, if possible, the Amkhass, all of which was effected without loss.

Providence has been pleased to crown the efforts of this gallant force with complete success, and with but few casualties on our side, as far as my observation went. His Lordship will judge of the satisfaction I felt on visiting at two P.M. the Mundee Awa, where one of the light field batteries of the Bombay force was located, and which before daybreak will be substituted by heavy guns and mortars, and ensure us the city in a little time.

I shall, after despatching this letter, return to the scene of operations, before leaving which, Brigadier Dundas was making a lodgment in the Seedee loll-ke-bed for his heavy guns, which he had close at hand.

(Then follow Division Orders.) Major-General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 28, 1848.

In furtherance of the letter I had the gratification of forwarding to you yesterday, by express, I beg to report, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that the force employed performed the duty assigned to it in the best spirit and style.

The portion on the extreme left was under the immediate command of Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., who appointed Brigadier Capon to the charge of the second column of the Bombay division, next to which was a detail under Lieut.-Col. Nash, C.B., 72nd N.I.; and on the extreme right (to reach its destination three-quarters of an hour later) was a detachment under the command of Lieut.-Col. Young, H.M.'s 10th foot.

The latter was under any circumstances to make a real attack upon the enemy's position, as stated in my letter of yesterday; and in the margin* I have specified separately the troops employed under the gallant leaders above named, to whom, as well as to the troops respectively under their immediate command, who so steadily effected the duty assigned to them, I feel much indebted.

It was intended that a portion of the irregular force, under Major Edwardes, C.B., and Lieutenant Lake, should make a demonstration to the west of the town and Grand Canal at noon. A little delay, however, ensued, but without detriment to the object in view, and I propose to-morrow availing myself of the services of those officers and their troops, to relieve the details of the Bombay division in charge of the Seedee loll-ke-bed, which has been with their usual zeal tendered simultaneously with a requisition I had made in a private note to Major Edwardes

The course pursued by the two centre columns came more particularly under my observation, but the gratifying result of all was the acquisition, with but little loss, of the very strong positions designated "Seedee loll-ke-bed," "Mundee Awa," the suburbs east of it, and to the north-east angle of the citadel, the "Amkhasa," "Sawun Mull's Tomb," the "Brick Kilns, with strong entrenchments, the "Shumstobreeze," or Blue or Blue Mosque, the village (or rather fort) of Wuzeerabad, all of which the enemy had evidently determined to defend manfully, but were deterred when the time came, by previously witnessing the discomfiture of their friends from the triple and earlier attack on the left.

I hope to morrow-morning to have an 8-inch mortar battery of six pieces playing on the citadel (at five or six hundred yards distance) from the north of the "Shumstobreeze."

Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, commanding Bombay Column of Mooltan Field Force, to Major General Whish.

Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 28, 1848. I have the honour to inform you that, agreeably to the instructions received from the assistant adjutant general, Bengal division, I moved from camp yesterday, about eleven o'clock, in two columns, the right being under the command of Brigadier Capon, the left under my own orders, Brigadier Stalker having the remainder of the division, ready to move in support, as might be required. On leaving camp, the right column proceeded nearly direct to the front, towards the Mundee Awa, guided by Capt. Abercrombie, of the Bengal engineers. On approaching a building named the Ramteerut, Brigadier Capon directed Major Dennis, commanding 60th rifles, to extend two companies, and take possession of the building, which was speedily effected, the battery under Capt. Bailey opening on the enemy from this point. Having formed line, the 3rd regiment N.I., under the command of Major Hallett, having also thrown out its skirmishers, the advance was made, and the troops advancing with a cheer, which was distinctly heard by the left column, drove the enemy from their entrenchments; and on mounting the Mundee Awa, found it vacated, and, following down on the other side, and on each flank, drove the enemy through the suburbs into the The object baving been obtained, in thus driving the enemy within the city walls, the guns were speedily placed in position on the mound, keeping up a continued fire on the

I regret to state that, almost immediately on mounting the summit of the mound, Lieut. Hill, of the engineers, was most severely wounded by the bursting of a shrapnell shell, which was thrown from the town, the same shot killing Lieut. Younghusband, 9th regiment N.I., and two artillerymen. Capt. Bailey also had his arm carried off by a cannon shot; and I have to regret the fall of Major Gordon, of the 60th royal rifles, who was killed in command of a party clearing the suburbs. For further details of the movements of the right column, I beg to refer to the report of Brigadier Capon, herewith inclosed, the operations of the left column, which was under my orders, having been so far separated as to preclude me from observing the movements on the right.

Brigadier Capon reports most favourably of the gallantry and good conduct of all under his command, and of the assistance he received from the staff officers attached to him. Capt. Tapp, deputy assistant adjutant-general; Capt. Stiles, major of brigade; Lieut. Pollexfen, deputy assistant quartermastergeneral, and Lieut Gordon, 60th Royal Rifles, who acted in the capacity of aide-de-camp.

The ground it had to pass over was very much broken and intersected with deep nullahs. From the advance of the 4th regiment N. I. (rifles), having crossed the first nullah too much to the left of where a practicable road had been cut, some time was lost in getting across, and the enemy's advanced picquets being distinctly seen, I ordered the advanced guard to extend, and as soon as the 4th rifles had got disentangled from the nullahs, I ordered the skirmishers to advance and drive in the enemy, which was speedily effected. The column moved on to the left, till the head had passed the left of the old entrenchments, when I balted the 1st Bombay fusiliers, under the command of Major Mignan, forming in the parallel, and the 4th N.I. (rifles) lying down under a bank in front of a white building or mosque. The battery, under the command of Capt. Turnbull and personal superintendence of Major Leeson, was placed in position opposite a mound which I understand was the "Seedee-lol ke-bed," on which it opened, the enemy immediately retiring. A few rounds were then fired at the mosque, which was occupied by the enemy, and I directed Major Honner, commending the 4th N.I. (rifles), to advance against it, throwing forward his left, and thus take it in reverse. Nothing could exceed the steadiness and good conduct of the 4th N.I. (rifles), who, moving in extended order, rapidly drove the enemy from the mosque, and also from another large one, with adjoining buildings, where the enemy had two guns, but which, in retiring, they succeeded in carrying off with them. A general advance then took place, the 1st Bombay fusiliers passing the mound to the right, and the 4th N.I. to the left. The guns were moved, as speedily as the nature of the ground would admit, to the top of the mound, from which I had been led to believe a view of the city could be had; but on arriving there I found another mound in front, and a third again beyond that. The troops kept gradually advancing over very difficult and strong ground, driving the enemy from every point at which he attempted to make a stand, the 1st fusiliers pursuing them through a deserted village into the suburbs, and the 4th rifles following them and driving them out of a large enclosure called the Beegee Bagh and quite into the suburbs. The guns were by very great exertion, and the active assistance of the sappers and miners, under Lieut. Kendall, placed in position in the Seedee-lol-ke-bed, from which, however, the city wall was scarcely perceptible, and the distance too great for the fire of the artillery to produce any great effect. While the guns were being brought up to the a retrograde movement was made by the troops, which had been occasioned by the 4th rifles having imprudently advanced too fur, and having expended their ammunition.

It was at this time that the greatest number of casualties occurred in that regiment, but the fusiliers falling back gradually, and keeping up a steady fire, checked the advance of the enemy, and covered the retreat of the 4th rifles.

Both regiments having formed under the hill, the ammunition was replenished, when I directed the fusiliers to move to the right, and drive the enemy from the deserted village, which was speedily done, the regiment forming under cover of the buildings, the front being covered by their skirmishers. The 4th rifles re-occupied the Beegee Bagh; and the object of the attack having been attained, in serving to distract the enemy, I did not consider any good could arise from a further advance. The troops maintained this position until dark, a constant cannonade being kept up from the battery.

Captain Woosnam joined in the afternoon with the heavy guns, and two 18-pounders were placed in position on the right of the field-battery. All the ammunition of the field-battery having been expended, and there being no more of that calibre (9-pounder) in the park, I ordered the battery to return to camp, their place being supplied by the troop of horse artillery under Major Blood. A reinforcement of one wing of the 19th N.I. under Major Mant, and two companies of the fusiliers, which I had sent for, arriving in the afternoon, I directed the former to relieve the 4th rifles in the "Beegee Bagh," the latter regiment being then formed in the rear and right of that enclosure, and the two companies of fusiliers under cover of an adjoining building. The Beegee Bagh being very extensive, and thickly studded with trees, I deemed it advisable to retire from it at dark, the sappers having taken the precaution to make several large openings in the wall, to facilitate the re-occupation of it if necessary. I then took up a position to the rear, the left being thrown back, and resting on the large mosque, and the right extending to the right of the "Seedee-lol-ke-bed." The enemy kept up a fire of matchlocks during the greater part of the night, but without doing any mischief.

I have great pleasure in expressing the satisfaction I experienced at the conduct of the troops. The conduct of the 19th Bombay fusiliers was most excellent, frequently charging the enemy with the bayonet, and drawing him within the city walls. The steadiness and good order in which the 4th rifles moved over very difficult ground deserves every commendation. The conduct of the 19th regiment, in maintaining its position in the Beegee Bagh, against all attempts of the enemy to get possession of it, was everything I could wish. The Sinde horse, under Lieut. Merewether, were always at hand, ready to support, but the ground was most unfavourable for the movements of cavalry; and whenever a few showed themselves, the enemy immediately

I had every reason to be satisfied with the assistance I received from the officers of the staff: Major Green, the assistant adjutant-general; Capt. Ramsay, the assistant quartermastergeneral; Capt. Skinner, the deputy judge-advocate-general; Capt. Skinner, the deputy judge-advocate-general; Capt. Morse, superintendent of brigades. Major Jackson, in command of the artillery, was indefatigable in his exertions, and the conduct of all ranks of that arm was most exemplary. Major Scott, the commanding engineer, also afforded me very valuable assistance, particularly in superintending the work of the sappers. Lieut. Ward, my aide-de-camp, and Capt. Auchmuty, Lieut. Henry, 19th regiment N. I., and Lieut. Loch, of the 1st lancers (junior), who also accompanied me, rendered every assistance. I beg to enclose a return of killed and wounded, which I regret to say is rather large, but am happy to add, that no officer was hurt with the left column.

(The conclusion in the next Mail.)

BENGAL.

THE ARMY OF THE PUNJAB.

'The latest intelligence from Lord Gough's army contained in our last extended to the 20th of January. Our present letters come down to the 3rd of February. At the former of these dates the Sikhs, under Shere Singh, and the British army, under the Commander-in-Chief, lay encamped about five miles from each other. The insurgents occupied the strong post of Russool, meant to have been attacked on the 14th of January, when Lord Gough lost his temper, and gave battle a day sooner than was intended, and on which his left at that day rested. former consisted of some 30,000 men of all arms-one-third, at least, of whom were in the last degree irregular-with about 40 guns, none heavier than 14 pounders. The river Jelum was in their rear, and their communication with the countries beyond, where their friends lay in strength, and from which their supplies were drawn, was maintained by a bridge of boats. Lord Gough had also at this time begun to entrench himself; he had ordered up the whole troops that could be spared from Ram-nuggur, and directed H. M.'s 53rd from Lahore, and H. M.'s 98th from Ferozepore, to join him without delay. Brig.-Gen. Wheeler's force from the Jullundur was also directed to join; it was about 5,000 strong, with 12 guns. On the 27th Gen. Whish's force, liberated from Mooltan by the surrender of the Dewan, began its upward march. The former reinforcements amounted to some 7,000, the latter to about 12,000, or 19,000 in all,—an army nearly equal to that at present on the Jelum, after H. M.'s 24th and the 30th N.I., rendered unserviceable through loss of officers on the 13th, had been sent back to Lahore. Ilahee Buksh, the commander of the Sikh artillery, who had come over to us about the 18th, proved himself meanwhile a valuable man in camp, from his knowledge of the country, and the purpose and enterprise with which he seemed disposed to exert himself. Hitherto Shere Singh apchuttur Singh and Akram Khan, son of the Ameer of Cabul, had both made visits to camp, but neither appears to have brought troops along with him. On the 27th Lieut. Bowie, the companion in arms of Major Lawrence at Peshawur, arrived in camp on parole. He was understood to be the bearer of overtures or explanations of some sort from Shere Singh; the nature of these had not transpired. He returned to the camp of the enemy on the expiry of his parole; all had, according to him, been kindly treated, and Major Lawrence had been permitted to rejoin his family at Sukkoo, from whom he had been so long separated. The Commander-in-Chief now began to clear the countries betwixt his camp and the Chenab of jungle and impediment—a tolerably essential operation, which had, it seems, been overlooked for a couple of months; and to erect strong outworks in the direction of the Sikh camp. so tremenduous a park of artillery and supply of mortars as that at his disposal, it might have been imagined, that, rather than stand still, he would have endeavoured to approach their position by regular parallels and covered ways, as in case of siege; our ordnance could have told on them fearfully at a range to which their shot could not have reached. On the 30th a party of the enemy was seen prowling about in quest of our camels as they fed; they were attacked by Lieut. Chamberlain with a party of Christie's irregular horse (the 9th); sixteen were cut down and slain; the rest were put to the rout. Lieut. Chamberlain was slightly wounded, this being the sixteenth time, we believe, that this brave officer has been hurt in action since 1840. At this time a working party of 500 Europeans were employed in throwing up a redoubt on the right face of the camp; they were relieved by a corresponding number at midnight. The work was carried on from sunset to dawn. Other works were ordered to be constructed by hired labourers. The sepoys guarded the workmen—having themselves, we presume, declined, as at Mooltan, to handle entrenching tools. The work was conducted under the supervision of Capt. Cunningham and Lieut. Young, of the engineers; and the enemy seemed to feel uneasy as they saw us at last adopting a system against them which they had pursued so long and with so much success against us. On the 1st of February a strong detachment, consisting of a regiment of dragoons, and another of light cavalry, with four guns, was detached to bring up supplies from Ramnuggur. Reports at this time prevailed that the Sikhs were about to send down detachments to attack the force advancing from Mooltan-or to operate against Col. Steinbach and his Jamoo troops; and it is probable that Lord Gough may propose fortifying his camp with the view of moving out, if requisite, with the larger portion of his troops, leaving a small detachment secure within their defences. Whish's force will probably reach him two days hence; till then, he is not likely voluntarily to undertake any operation against the enemy. said that after the next great engagement the troops will go into quarters for the season. They are, in fact, nearly three weeks' march from Peshawur, and the campaign cannot be considered completed till this city, together with Attock and the Hazareh and Bunnoo countries, be subdued; operations which would carry us far into the month of May - a season at which men can scarcely live under canvas.—Bombay Times, Feb. 17.

Lieut. Herbert came into the British camp on the 27th of January, and Lieut. Bowie on the following day. The latter officer, it appears, was the bearer of some proposals from Shere Singh, but their nature did not transpire, though it was understood Lord Gough would hear of nothing but "unconditional surrender." These two officers, as well as the other prisoners in the hands of the Sikhs, seem to have received kind and considerate treatment. On the 31st of January, working parties were formed, and a redoubt began to be thrown up in advance of the right face of the camp. By the last accounts several guns had been mounted on this field work. A number of the enemy's cavalry, on the look out for our camels at graze, came in contact on the 30th with a party of Christie's irregular horse, under Lieut. Chamberlain, who attacked them and put them to flight, killing sixteen and taking several prisoners. Lieut. Chamberlain was wounded, as well as some of his men. "On the 1st," says a letter, "two squadrons of the 8th lancers, two of the 14th dragoons, a regiment of light cavalry, and four of Warner's guns, proceeded in the direction of Goojerat, to bring in a convoy of some 2,500 camel loads of provisions, and taking with them twelve Sikh guns captured on the 13th ultimo, to be deposited at Ramnugger. This detachment marched as far as Bogrewalla, where they intended to have bivouacked, having taken no tents with them; but at that place Col. King, who was in command of the party, received a letter from Capt. Biddulph, who is in charge of the convoy of camels, telling him that he wished for immediate support, as the enemy were stated to have collected a large force of cavalry in his neighbourhood for the purpose of intercepting him. To this letter Col. King responded by an immediate advance, and he has returned, bringing in the convoy in perfect safety. This gives us an abundant and most timely supply of provisions, which will last us until Gen. Whish's force join us about the 18th. Our new friend Elahee Bux is exerting himself much in obtaining supplies for our camp, thus proving the sincerity of his intentions towards us." Chuttur Singh paid a visit to his son's camp soon after the action of the 13th, but it seems he did not long remain there. The Delhi paper represents him as "incapacitated by personal infirmity from taking an active part in the military operations," and says, that in consequence, he has "placed himself in charge of the civil duties connected with the rebellion." Mahomed Akram Khan, a son of Dost Mohamed of Cabul, is reported to have been, for a considerable time, in the Sikh camp. There have also been rumours of Shere Singh having been joined by large bodies of Affghans; but although we have reason to believe that a considerable number of troops from Cabul have made their appearance in the hill country beyond the Jhelum, we do not think authentic information has been received of any portion of them having as yet crossed over to the left bank of the river. The next fight with the Sikhs will effectually test the willingness of their Affghan friends to join and co-operate with them. The Delhi Gazette says-

" It is mentioned in one of our letters, but as we see no confirmation of it in any other we give the report quantum valeat, that this detachment of Affghans is commanded by thre Europeans, formerly privates of H. M.'s 44th foot, who remained in Cabul at the time of the evacuation, and became Mahometans. It is singular that in our frequent correspondence with Cabul, and especially during the visit of Col. Lawrence's envoy to that capital, for the purpose of bringing away any of those who might have remained, this fact should not have transpired long since, especially as Mr. Campbell's name has been frequently mentioned in connexion with the army of the Ameer. As it is added circumstantially, however, in the letter before us that these three individuals had actually visited Lieut. Bowie, and we presume this statement comes from him, we cannot reject its probability on the mere ground that these men have not hitherto been mentioned, especially when we consider that by abandoning Christianity for Mahometanism they became virtually identified with the people whom they joined, and so disappeared among the mass."

This story wears an aspect of improbability; but we place it

This story wears an aspect of improbability; but we place it on record. By the last advices the weather at Chilianwalla was very favourable; the wounded were doing well; the troops generally were healthy, and the army was regaining its spirits after the disastrous triumph for which royal salutes were fired all over India. In the last number of the Delhi Gazette we find the following:

"Reports had also been received that the Sikh leader was bent on sending, or had actually sent, a strong detachment of his troops down the right bank of the Jhelum to meet the advancing Mooltan force. These accounts may prove correct, and their probability is countenanced by the fact, mentioned in several army letters, that the Sikh camp had, to all appearance, undergone a sensible diminution. At one time it was supposed this was owing to the detachment of a body of troops to attack Colonel Steinbach at Meerpoor; but the presence of a large body near Goojerat may explain the matter at once."

We think it is scarcely probable that Shere Singh would weaken the force opposed to Lord Gough on the Jelum, in the hope of overthrowing the advancing columns under Gen. Whish and Brigadier Dundas. His only chance appears to have been rapidly to gather reinforcements, and strike another blow against the British force before Gen. Whish could join the main army. From all accounts this chance seems likely to be thrown away. Lord Gough, when reinforced, will be strong enough to re-enact on the Jelum the sanguinary scene of the Sobraon, the waters of which stream were crowded with fugitive and beaten Sikhs, while its waves for the time ran crimson with their blood.

Intelligence has been received to the effect that Major Lawrence, having been permitted to rejoin his family, had proceeded for that purpose to the fort of Sukkoo, where Mrs. Lawrence and her children were confined. The party, it is gratifying to add, continued to be treated with "much consideration and kindness." Troops have been ordered from Lahore to reinforce Lord Gough. Our Delhi contemporary says—

Six companies of H. M.'s 53rd foot marched from Lahore on the 1st of February for the camp of the Commander-in-Chief, and on the same day the two companies of H. M.'s 98th foot that have been doing duty with the escort of the Governor-General marched from Ferozepore in progress to Lahore. Orders were also issued to the 17th irregular cavalry (Liptrott's) to proceed in the same direction, in consequence of Capt. Quin's corps (the 14th) having been directed to march towards the head-quarters camp. H. M.'s 98th foot had been halted near Loodianah on account of its being deemed advisable to commit treasure to their care."—Bombay Telegraph, Feb. 17.

MOOLTAN.

The counterscarp having been blown in, on the 18th January, tremendous salvos of artillery continued to be hurled against the works from a distance of some scores of yards, while huge howitzers dashed shells bodily right into the walls. On the 20th two practicable breaches had been established, and the storming parties had been told on. To the Bengalese that on the southern side was assigned, while the Bombay troops were to penetrate that on the north. The attack was to have been made at daybreak on the 21st, but was countermanded. A letter had been received from the Governor-General, authorizing Gen. Whish to assure Moolraj of his life, and there was naturally every disposition to avoid the slaughter on both sides a storm must have occasioned, however little doubt there might be as to its results. On the 21st the order was re-issued; it was to be carried into effect on the following morning. evening of that day a messenger was seen issuing from the gate, and making his way on foot to camp. He was taken to the general's tent, and after an interview of some duration, returned on horseback. The garrison had agreed to an unconditional surrender, Gen. Whish probably assuring them that their lives would be spared, though no pledge to this effect could be given. The troops were drawn up at daybreak on the 22nd; they formed two long lines extending from the Dowlut Gate. street betwixt the living walls of armed men was about fifty feet in breadth. They waited some hours under heavy rain on their guard, in case of treachery or surprise; when about 10 o'clock a messenger appeared, intimating that the garrison were at hand. First appeared, intimating that the garrison were at hand. First appeared about 200 ill-clothed miserable wretches, who seemed broken and dispirited; then followed about 3,500 hard, trained, stern, and stalwart-looking men; they had defended the fort to the last, and abandoned it only when no longer tenable. looked as if they would have fought to the death in the breaches if such had been the will of their chief. They brought camels and horses and large bundles of things along with them. These, together with their arms, were placed in charge of the prize agents as they passed. At last came Moolraj and his brethren and chiefs—the last as became him in the retirement. He was gorgeously attired in silks and splendid arms, and rode a magnificent Arab steed, with a rich saddle-cloth of scarlet, which bore no marks of suffering or privation. No small curiosity was experienced to discover the appearance of one who had maintained a defence obstinate and protracted beyond any related in the annals of modern warfare. He but little exceeds the middle size; is powerfully but elegantly formed; his keen, dark piercing, restless eyes surveyed at a glance everything around. He neither wore the face of defiance or dejection, but moved along under the general gaze as one conscious of having bravely done his duty, and aware of being the object of universal regard. He was taken to the general's tent, where he gave up his sword: this is said to have been returned him. He was now placed in charge of Lieut. Henry, of the 19th Bombay N.I., who had quitted the personal staff of the Governor of Bombay to be present with his regiment at the scene of action. Moolraj seems to have been actually adored by the people, and no stronger evidence of this attachment and fidelity can be given than that supplied by the fact that, though for a fortnight his defence was known to be desperate-though hundreds were being slaughtered daily, and no result whatever could be looked for but death or captivity-no one ever threatened to abandon him, or thought of betraying him. He was spoken of by all in terms of the highest respect and deepest attachment—as a man not more brave than he was generous and just. It now became necessary to separate him from his brethren and chiefs, and the separation is represented as having been most touching. There were eighteen of these of higher rank than the rest, who had been with him through all his adventures. They threw themselves at his feet, and wept sore as they were parted from him and might not hope to see his face any more. He was placed under a strong guard some distance from the town, in a fine country residence his father had built. Writing materials were prohibited him, but every attention was shown to his comfort in so far as this was compatible with his safety. He declined seeing his family -he had not beheld them for nearly a month before; they had been placed for safety in an excavation under ground, and he refused all intercourse with them, as the sight of his mother, wife, and children, he said, unmanned him, and disturbed him in the discharge of his duties. It was not considered safe to retain him longer than was indispensable in a neighbourhood where there were numberless dependents ready to incur any risk in attempting his rescue, and he was accordingly ordered to proceed with the force about to march up the line of the Chenab in the direction of Ramnuggur, to turn off as they approached the road leading to Lahore for the camp of the Governor-General. Orders were now given to the troops to prepare for their upward march—the 4th com, 2nd bat, artillery, 1st and 2nd com. 4th bat. Golundauze, No. 5 light field battery, the 1st lancers, the 4th com. sappers and miners, the 4th and 9th N.I., and a division of the baggage corps, to be left behind in charge of the fort -the residue of the Bombay column to March by the left bank of the Chenab under Brig.-Gen, the Hon. H. Dundas, the Bengal troops under Major-Gen. Whish by the right. wounded were put on board the Beas flat, to be towed by the steamers down the river, and thence proceed to Bombay. The battering train was sent into the fort, and the breaches were ordered to be built up. The troops now made their way in numbers into the fort, and a scene of plunder is said to have ensued in the last degree discreditable to the discipline of the Bengal army. The details given by our correspondents are too dis-tressing to be dwelt upon. The fort was completely separated from the town. It was surrounded by a regular glacis, which, instead of sloping away to a point, was cut off short, exhibiting a face of at least eighteen feet in height. At the base of the wall was a ditch twenty-five feet deep and forty wide; beyond this was the outer wall, fifty feet from the base of the ditch to the battlements. Within the fort, and on a considerable elevation, was the citadel, in itself of very great strength. - Bombay Times, Feb. 17.

The following graphic description of the appearance of Mooltan, after it passed into our hands, is from the Delhi Gazette:—

"Fort of Mooltan, 25th January.

"The day before yesterday, Major Wheeler commenced his researches for the reputed wealth contained within these walls. He was accompanied by an old bed-ridden mistree, of Sawun Mull's time; thus was a clue obtained to the whereabouts of those vast subterranean storehouses of which we have heard. The principal of these were pointed out in the open ground within the citadel, as also among the ruins of the explosion. Some of these contain a large amount of silks, others ghee, and grain stored up in the lifetime of the late Dewan's father. There is also a great collection of opium, indigo, &c., worth a large sum of money. Two or three lacs of rupees were blown up with the vast chaos of valuables. When the rubbish shall have been cleared away from the entrances of the tykannaha, we shall no doubt be able to extricate many of the bales of shawls and silks. In the mint a pretty good amount of silver and gold coin was found. Moolraj's house and the neighbouring Toshuhkhanah contained a great quantity, as also many valuable swords, and rich property of every description. The fort is reduced to such a heap of ruins that it will require many months to excavate and remove the fallen houses. The site of the explosions is marked by a long deep pit, around which buildings are piled on buildings, scarcely one brick remains on another; corpses, carcases of animals, and every description of property, strew the ground; the stench within the citadel is dreadful, there must be hundreds of men buried in the rubbish. The piles of huge stone-shot have been hurled to a great distance, and the contents of large bomb-proofs showered far and wide upon the occupants of the place. The Bahawul Huk shrine is reduced to a mere wreck, but that of Shah Rookn Alum has been more fortunate; it has escaped with only a few scars. It is a most massive structure, and from its great height commands a beautiful view of the surrounding country. On ascending two winding-staircases, the parapet is reached; thence may be seen the snowy range, the winding course of the Chenab. the numerous canals, gardens, and fields which dot the far spreading jungle; even Jhung, on a very clear day, is said to be Within the courtyard of this shrine there is a newlybuilt range of bomb-proof barracks; in these, some valuable property has been stowed away. Moolraj's house appears to have been once a good substantial one; it is unroofed, and the walls are knocked to pieces with our shells; he appears to have vacated it long ago. There is a large garden, with raised walks, which appear to have been nicely laid out. Between this and the before-mentioned tomb there is an enormous domed magazine, surrounded by a dry ditch, several feet deep; a trench has been cut to communicate with it underground, and the surface being closely packed with logs of timber, a mine is suspected: double sentries have been placed as a precaution against acci-

The stables, godowns, and arsenal, are built in long ranges behind the citadel wall; they are mostly protected by domed roofs of considerable thickness, but our shells have penetrated them, and set fire to the contents: many dead and wounded men, on charpoys, were found in them. In a large timber-yard wheels for guns of all sizes, and Zumbooruk saddles, newly made, are lying about in great profusion. Further on, near the ramparts, are two large brick furnaces for casting cannnon; an earthen mould of a very large one—intended to be made—lies close to The quantity of loose gunpowder in every hole and corner is surprising; the largest collections are those in the vicinity of the heaps of arms thrown away by the garrison before making their exit. Camp followers and others appear utterly regardless of danger, for blazing fires of logs are met with at every turn. Some small explosions have occurred, but no one has been killed, though many have been seriously burnt. The soil appears made of lead. Bullets strew the ground like pebbles; the supply would have lasted for years had the garrison held out; cannon balls are equally common, from those stone ones of Brobdignagian proportion to the Lilliputian for onepounders; thirty-nine cannon have been counted, and four mortars (the largest of these has been knocked off his rade carriage by our shot). There is abundance of wall pieces of all sizes and lengths; zumbooruks and muskets innumerable, with piles of matchlocks of every weight and size. Talware by thousands, and heaps of wooden and leather accoutrements for all the above weapons. I think Mooltan is the beau ideal of a Buneea's fort, or rather fortified shop. Never, perhaps, in India have such depôts existed of merchandize and arms, amalgamated as they are with avarice. Here opium, indigo, salt, sulphur, and every known drug are heaped in endless profusion; there, apparently, ancient granaries in the bowels of the earth disclose their huge hoards of wheat and rice; here stacks of leathern ghee vessels, brimming with the grease, fill the pucka receptacles below ground; there siks and shawls revel in darkness, bales rise on bales; here some mainmoth chest discovering glittering scabbards of gold and gems; there tiers of copper canisters crammed with gold mohurs. My poor pen cannot describe the variety of wealth displayed to the inquisitive eye. Tumbrils under strong guards have been moving too and fro with gold coin all the day; it is said that three or four crores are concealed in the fort; the place is alone known to Moolraj, who may eventually make such disclosures as would materially benefit his cause. The sappers are busily employed in filling up our trenches and approaches. I think we have taught the Mooltanees how to take a fortress, and they will probably profit by the tuition should affairs ever allow it.

Preparations baving been made for the upward march of the troops, on the 27th of January the first portion of the Bengal force, under Brigadier Markham, of H.M.'s 32nd, marched out. It was composed of Anderson's troop horse artillery, the 11th irregular cavalry, H.M.'s 32nd foot, and the 51st and 72nd He reached Ameerghur on the 28th, and halted at Sirdarpore, the place where the Sikhs from Mooltan attacked them on their downward march on the 16th of August, and where Shere Singh first encamped on the 11th of October on his retirement, on the 30th; they crossed the Ravee at its junction with the Chenab on the 31st, and arrived within six marches of Jhung, a large mercantile town near the junction of the Chenab and Jelum. They were from this to push on to Ramnugger, the place near which the grand army lay encamped on the 20th November. They were expected to reach this, if all went well with them, by about the 18th of February. On the 30th the 2nd brigade, consisting of Mackenzie's troop of horse artillery, twelve heavy guns, the 11th regular cavalry, H. M.'s 10th foot, and the 8th and 51st N.I., commanded by Brigadier Hervey, followed in the footsteps of the first. On the 2nd of February the Bombay column marched, under Brig.-Gen. the Hon. H. Bombay column marched, under Brig.-Gen. the Hon. Dundas, with Col. D. Capon as brigadier. It consisted of H.M.'s 60th rifles, the 1st Bombay European fusiliers, the 3rd and 19th N.I., the 3rd troop of horse artillery, the 2nd comp. 1st batt. European artillery, with No. 7 light field battery attached, the 1st comp. of sappers and miners, and 500 of the 2nd Scinde horse,—in all about 2,200 Europeans and 2,400 natives, all in the very highest condition. They expected to reach Ramnuggur in 17 marches. Letters of the 4th from their camp reached us last night, at which date they were at Kotah, 25 miles north of Mooltan. The siege train had been sent into the fort, and the breaches were ordered to be partially repaired, Major Scott, of the Bombay engineers, having been ordered to report on its condition, to enable the Governor-General to decide whether it should be razed to the ground, or repaired and garrisoned. In the event of the latter being determined on,

5,000 men will be requisite for its defence. The troops left behind are not above 2,600 in all. The 7th Bengal irregular horse and 49th N.I. had been left behind to convey treasure to Ferozepore and Lahore. Instead of appropriating the booty found in the town, the inhabitants were allowed to hold it to ransom for 200.000*l*.—they had offered 300,000*l*, to save it from sack when we first entered it. Here the amount of plundering permitted by the Bengal troops appears to have been fearfulthe work of spoliation being by no means confined to the men. The fort having surrendered, the booty found there will not, it is understood, be allotted to the captors, but was to be assigned to the durbar. It is said to amount to upwards of 1,000,000/. sterling; it will, of course, pass immediately from the durbar to the British treasury, to meet the charges of the war. The sick and wounded of the Bengal division, about 160 in number, under Capt. Moore, H. M.'s 10th foot, had reached Ferozepore by boat. Capt. Maitland, 72nd N. I., and Lieut. Irwin, 49th N. I., who had both been severely wounded during the first siege, had accompanied them. The whole were under the medical charge of Dr. Macbeth, 10th foot. Lieut. Gillon, 72nd N.I., who was wounded at the storming of the suburbs on the 27th of December, died on the 20th of January. Lieut, J. Thompson, of the artillery, was the last officer killed before Mooltan, having been shot in the trenches on the morning of the 21st January; the total number killed since August being 13. - Ibid.

The wounded and sick officers and men belonging to the Bombay force left Mooltan on the 27th ult.; and at the time of their departure consisted (according to the Bombay Times) of the following:—Wounded—Capt. T. Tapp, Capt. R. D. H. Leith, and Lieut. W. Gray, 1st fusiliers; Lieuts. J. Hill and J. A. Fuller, engineers; and W. N. Dyett, 3rd N. I. Siek-Brevet-Capt. J. B. Woosnam and Lieut. D. M'Dougall, artillery; and Ensign F. G. Steuart, 9th N.I.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BOMBAY EXPRESS came in on the morning of the 3rd instant, and the Bentinck with the mails was reported in the course of the same day. Owing to the arrangements of the Egyptian transit administration not having been completed, the steamer has brought only a part of the cargo which should have been embarked at Suez.

THE OSERVATORY AT LUCKNOW has been broken up, and all the Baboos dismissed, by order of the king. There are few votaries of science who will not lament the destruction of an establishment, formed at a vast expense, and which might have been made the instrument of great benefit in the diffusion of knowledge.

THE SUDDER COURT.—The Englishman asserts that the Sudder Court have received orders from the Home Government, to the effect that Mr. Welby Jackson is to conduct the English correspondence, hear miscellaneous appeals, and applications for special appeals, in short, every species of miscellaneous work; leaving the regular appeals and special appeals to the other judges.

ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL.-The petition against the act for the appointment of the administrator-general has been sent up to Government, signed by two civilians, four staff officers, six clergymen, ten medical men, eleven barristers, twenty-one SAILORS' HOME.—A meeting of the subscribers to the Sailors' Home took place on the 31st January, the Honourable Sir John Colville in the chair. It was stated that the severe commercial distress in Calcutta had much crippled the resources of the institution, but that, notwithstanding this drawback, an unusual number of sailors had been entertained. The total amount of the funds from all sources was Rs. 33,960, and the total expenditure Rs. 30,700, leaving 3,260 rupees to the benefit of the Institution.

H. M.'s 80rn Foor. - The Hurharu mentions that H. M.'s 80th foot, now stationed at Dinapore, are ordered to hold themselves in readiness to march upwards, and without their wives and children.

THE STATUE OF LORD AUCKLAND, which arrived recently from England, was erected and opened to the public gaze on Saturday afternoon, January 22, opposite the Supreme Court.

THE CAPE PACKET.—The Englishman is sorry to hear that Captain Pentreath, of the Mangosteen, reports that, on the day that ship got under weigh from Pinang, the 3rd January, the Cape Packet, Captain Miller, was burnt to the water's edge, with a full cargo, and nothing angel. full cargo, and nothing saved.

Morussic Justice. - A curious, but not unusual illustration recently took place at Sreenagore. The person whose house was plumdered denied the robbery, because he had suffered enough already, and was unable to bear any further expense.

WRECKS. - Singapore papers to the 28th ultimo bring news from China of the loss of H. M.'s sloop Scout, which had struck on a rock in working up the river Min, and gone down in seven fathoms; hands saved. The loss of the British ship Canton, from Sydney to China, on the island of Tinian, on the 2nd October, is also reported; only five persons, out of a crew of twenty-five, were saved, and reuched Manilla.—The Maulmain Chronicle, of the 10th January, states that part of the crew of the Sarah Crisp, which was wrecked in the Chinese seas, have arrived at Rangoon on board the Colonel Burney, and have since arrived at Maulmain per Fame. The rest of the crew, with the exception of the captain and mate, who have obtained employ-ment in China, have gone on to Calcutta by the Champion. Enalishman.

H. M.'s 14TH DRAGOONS.—A letter from camp mentions that the 14th dragoons were rallied by the Rev. Mr. Whiting, who upbraided them for their want of firmness, and implored them to turn their faces to the enemy.

THE BARK Champion was sold on the 25th of January by Messrs. Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co., for Rs. 32,000.

The Malls which have hitherto left Bombay on the first of the month are henceforward to be despatched on the third.

CAPTAIN J. S. BANKS, 33rd N.I., has been pronounced by the examiners of the college of Fort William to possess such acquirements as entitle him to a degree of honour in the Bengalee language.

TIN MINES OF MALACCA.—The farm of the tin mines of Malacca for this year has produced 18,000 dollars, while it sold last year for only 8,000. This extraordinary increase is probably to be attributed to the influx of Chinese for the mining works, which has become so rapid that there are now nearly 8.000 men employed. The increasing prosperity of this, the least flourishing of the Straits settlements, is a matter of congratulation.

NATIVE CONVERT FROM PROTESTANTISM TO CATHOLICISM. We regret to say that a neophyte, under the care of the Free Church, has lapsed into Romanism, under circumstances of an unusual character. Within a few hours of the period when he had figured as a trophy of Protestant valour—an earnest of the success which had waited on the pious exertions of the Scottish missionaries—he was admitted into the bosom of the Catholic Church. Viswanauthun was, we believe, a preacher in the native languages, and was honourably noticed on Thursday last, at the examination of the missionary schools. On Friday he was allowed to read his recantation of presumed heresies, and in the morning services at the Romish Chapel in Royaporam, he was found acknowledging the superior advantages of his new creed, and apparently as anxious to fulfil his latest obligations as he had been to perform his earliest vows .- Athenaum.

INFANTICIDE. - The success of the Goomsoor Agency, during the last few months, has kept pace with the results of its previous exertions. In November, Col. Campbell moved to the muliahs of Chinna Kimedy, through the hill tracts of Souradah, where infanticide generally prevails; the tribes who thus destroy their female offspring were partly visited by the agent, or summoned to meet him; and, notwithstanding all the exertions of Col. Campbell's predecessor, it was proved that the practice who had been given in marriage to the sons of influential Khond chiefs, admitted the destruction of their female children in obedience to their husbands will. Col. Campbell exacted a stringent pledge from them all henceforward to rear their females, and used every argument likely to weigh with these grossly ignorant and superstitious people. He then proceeded with his camp into the wild and almost inaccessible regions of Chinna Kimedy. From the known savage character of the inhabitants of these tracts, much apprehension existed as to the results of this expedition. Without compromising the rajahs of the low country in the eyes of their hill allies as abettors of the Government, the agent procured their co-operation in the work in hand. Up to this time upwards of 100 victims have been rescued, and a salutary dread of the power of the Government impressed upon the minds of the Chinna Kimedy lieges. In a short time, the Colonel, it may be presumed, will have cleared the whole of those hill tracts of their Meriahs. In Chokapad and Boad there is peace and prosperity. Although only ten months have elapsed since the agency rescued 235 victims from these (Boad) hills, not a single sacrifice has been performed this year, a result beyond the most sanguine hopes; a very prosperous harvest, and no unusual sickness, have providentially aided in the complete suppression of the rite. - Athenaum.

H. M.'s 94rn Regr., now stationed at Cannanore, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness for immediate despatch to Scinde.

The Bishop of Calcutta arrived at Madras on he 3lst January, from Colombo.

Cholera is raging to a great extent at Trichinopoly.

H. M.'s 51sr Regr.—Orders have been issued at Bangalore, directing the head-quarters and right wing of H. M.'s 51st regt. to hold themselves in readiness for proceeding to Cannanore, in the event of the 94th regt. being ordered to Scinde.

MILITARY FUND.—The directors of the military fund have come to a satisfactory understanding with their secretary, so that Capt. Shelley will continue in the post.

Da. Scorr. - The native community of Madras ought to be deeply obliged to Sir Henry Pottinger, who has, we find, sent an unsolicited donation of 200 rupees, in aid of the excellent institution for the cure of diseases, established by Dr. Scott. an example of support, on the part of an English gentleman, to an hospital conducted by an English physician, for the relief of the sick and destitute amongst the Indian poor, ought to operate as a powerful incentive to the native gentry, to contribute according to their means, and greater responsibilities. We understand that the success of Dr. Scott in treating the maladies incidental We understand to the female portion of his patients, has had a wonderful effect in subduing the prejudices usually entertained against European treatment in the minds of the people at large.

TRANSFER OF TROOPS.—We understand that in consequence of a requisition from the Bombay Government for troops from this Presidency, the following regiments will be transferred.

H.M.'s 94th from Cannanore to Scinde or elsewhere at dis-

Four other regiments of Native Infantry, the corps not yet decided upon, but supposed to be the 5th N.I., 15th N.I., 19th N.I., and 40th N.I., will be made available for the occupation of Bombay cantonments.—Athenaum.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE STEAMER Surat grounded on the 12th Feb. on the coast of Kattiawar, during a dense fog. She had on board 7 officers and 73 recruits for the 8th and 60th foot, who were all landed, with their baggage, in safety.

The Ship Fully Rahimony, Mr. C. L. Radford in charge, was destroyed by fire on the 10th. Feb.

THE MAIL, with letters from London to Jan. 8, arrived at Bombay Feb. 7.

ACCIDENT TO LORD FALKLAND. -On the evening of the 9th Feb. as Lord Falkland was returning from a ball, his horse took fright, and ran away with speed. His lordship escaped with some bruises.

INFATUATION. - The Bombay Telegraph relates a most singular case of infatuation. A considerable quantity of gunpowder happened to be lying at a ghaut in that presidency to be used for blasting. The overseer, Dondo Thakoor, impatient at the slow process of drying this powder in the sun, ordered a quantity to be placed in a frying pan and heated over a fire. man to whom the order was given refused, but a woman was prevailed upon; the powder exploded, and killed the woman and five other persons, among whom was the overseer himself.

MAGNIFICENT LIBERALITY OF SIR JAMSETJEE JEEJEEBHOY.—
After the receipt of the distinction conferred upon him by her Majesty, Sir Jamsetjee promised to found a school for the instruction of poor Parsees in the English language, and to supply them with the means of performing their funeral and marriage ceremonies. This promise is now fulfilled by a gift of three lakhs of rupees, and twenty shares in the Bank of Bengal. The Parsee Punchayet has added thirty-five more shares, and the Government allows six per cent. for the money. The proceeds will amount to Rs. 40,000 a year.

CAPTAIN T. G. CARLESS, I. N.—We give below, from the pen of one who knew him well, a notice of the demise of Capt. T. G. Carless, I. N. He was present with the Indian naval squadron in the Burmese war, and attained his rank of Captain on the 28th August, 1846, and had been much employed on survey, always discharging his duties with ability and zeal.

Many of the results of his labours are before the world in the pages of the "Geographical Transactions." He for some years held the Aden and Red Sea command, and was very nearly lost. while bringing troops across in the Sesostris on the 17th April, when the unhappy Cleopatra went down with all on board. An excellent memoir of this memorable hurricane was after-wards drawn up by him. His loss will be deeply regretted by the members of the service to which he belonged. "Bushire, 23rd December.—The death of Commodore T. G. Carless, commanding I. N. squadron in the Persian Gulf, occurred at Bushire on the 16th inst. Judging from the commodore's appearance, and the excellent health he enjoyed up to the date of his last and fatal illness, no man within the range of our acquaintance gave promise of so long a life; but he was suddenly taken ill on the evening of the 29th November, with a severe attack of confluent small-pox. The disease was of avery bad kind, and attended with the worst symptoms, so that almost from the very commencement there were reasons for serious apprehensions as to his ultimate recovery. Naturally of a good and sound constitution, he weathered the violence of the disease, and was doing pretty well on the 11th and 12th inst., and we were full of hopes that the worst was gone by. On the 13th instant his illness assumed a new and alarming aspect; he was attacked with an affection of the lungs, under which he rapidly sank, and died on the morning of the 16th. His sudden removal has cast a gloom on all the Englishmen in this place, - more particularly on the officers and crew of his own ship, by whom his loss is justly and most sincerely regretted. It is a tribute due to the memory of the commodore, that we should bear testimony to his gentlemanly and correct deportment towards all those with whom he was connected during his short period of service in the Persian Gulf. To his own officers he was kind, affable, and hospitable: his house was always open and free to them, and they ever met a welcome. To his men he was considerate and condescending,-alive to their every want, and to whatever might conduce to their comfort and happiness. In every other relationship his conduct was no less commendable. The commodore died in the forty-second year of his age."-Bombay Times, Feb. 14.

CHINA.

THE PERIN, with the London Mail of Nov. 24, reached Hong-Kong Jan. 22.

Hong-Kong. - H. M.'s steam ship Inflexible sails for Cochin China to-day in search of the long missing Kelpie; it is possible that she was dismasted in the October gales, and carried down by the currents on the shores of that inhospitable country, and that the crew are detained by the authorities. H. M.'s ship Scout has been raised through the extraordinary exertions of her captain, officers and crew, aided by H. M.'s steamer Medea, H. M.'s brig Columbine, and a party of Chinese. She is expected here in a couple of weeks; but it will be long before she is purified, the mud of the Min having found its way into every crevice. H. M.'s ship Hastings, with the war steamers Fury and Medea, are in port; the Inflexible will return in about three weeks; H. M.'s brig Arab, and the H. C.'s steamer Phlegethon, are in the Canton river; H. M.'s ships Columbine, Mariner, and Scout, are at the northern ports: H. M.'s ship Meander, H. M.'s brig Pilot, and the H. C.'s steamer Nemesis, are expected from Labuan. The whole of this force, under command of Rear Admiral Sir F. A. Collier, will be available for service in April.

—Friend of China, Jan. 29.

Friend of China, Jan. 29.

Canton.—The Chinese new year holidays have passed without any commotion, but trade has not resumed an active form, the transactions of the month having been chiefly with reference to the annual balancing of accounts at the end of the year. It is doubtful whether any great improvement will take place for some time. The Chinese merchants look forward with anxiety to the 1st April, when the vexatious question of entering the city ought to be settled in terms of the agreement with Sir John Davis; nor is this the only knotty point which requires to be solved, the right of leasing building ground in terms of the treaty is still evaded, and with a population many times more numerous, merchants are cooped up in the limits allotted to foreigners centuries ago. It is clear that even though the city were declared open, foreigners could not enter with any degree of safety; but unfortunately the right has been urged so long—and the city only spared by Sir John Davis, when the British force was prepared to storm it, on condition that the gates be opened in two years-that it would now be imprudent to abandon our right at the clamour of the mob. The impression is, that on the 1st of April, Seu, the imperial commissioner, will refuse to comply with the agreement entered into between his predecessor Keying and Sir John Davis, and the gates will not be opened. A strong naval force is congregating, and possibly the British Admiral may settle the point of honour by entering the city at the head of a brigade of sea-men and marines. We have not sufficient force to garrison Canton or protect the factories; the dishonour of the maiden city would bring down the villagers like locusts, and the result would probably be the abandonment of the factories to the fury of the patriots.-Ibid.

STEPHENS, Simon, at Singapore, aged 46, Jan. 12.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THURSDAY, March 22, 1849.

THE action of Chillianwallah (as it must now be termed), its unsatisfactory result and its tremendous sacrifice of life, have provoked very unfavourable comments upon the British commander; and the circumstances under which his successor in the chief command in India has been appointed tend, in some degree, to justify those comments. An unsuccessful general, it is true, though his most skilful arrangements may have been defeated by unforeseen accidents, is nevertheless commonly an object of popular blame; but in the case of Lord Gough, whose bravery is unquestionable, and who has won very high distinctions by his preceding services, the censure passed upon his conduct as a tactician and strategist is so universal, even in the face of his own despatch,—which declares that "the victory was complete, as to the total overthrow, utter discomfiture and defeat of the enemy,"-that it is extremely difficult to regard such censure as altogether groundless and unjust.

The general's despatch, written three days after the battle, is perspicuous enough in its language, but the details are somewhat meagre, and by no means clear. Its encomiastic terms are too profuse and hyperbolical; this, however, is a more generous fault than that of parsimonious dryness. It is only by comparing his report with the narratives of other eye-witnesses that we discover its apparent defects, and find reasons for doubting whether his fine army—strong in every arm and perfect in all its appointments—was so managed as to obtain all the advantages which might reasonably have been expected under the circumstances.

We are quite aware of the objections to which such a comparison is open. The Duke of Wellington, when in Portugal, complained of the criticisms pronounced upon his measures by his own officers, who had an imperfect knowledge of his plans, and observed that, although "they had a right to form their own opinions upon events and transactions, they ought to keep them to themselves." In using these anonymous reports of facts, as well as opinions, we do so, therefore, with an avowal that they must not be received as conclusive evidence.

Lord Gough states that his determination to attack the enemy resulted from the intelligence he had received of the advance of Chuttur Singh to reinforce his son, and from the suggestion of Major Mackeson, the political agent, in which he concurred, that it was expedient "to strike an effectual blow at the enemy with the least possible delay;" and he acknowledges that he knew that the country which the enemy occupied was "excessively difficult" and "ill-adapted to the advance of a regular army."

Both accounts concur in respect to the movements of the British forces up to the afternoon of the 13th, the day of the battle, when the private reports represent that Lord Gough suddenly changed his plan of operations, and, instead of attacking Russool, deployed in front of Moong. The general's own account states that, after dispersing the enemy's picket, he obtained a very extensive view of the country, and of the enemy, "drawn out in battle-array," who had moved from his positions and occupied the ground in front of the British army, which was a difficult jungle. He says, the day being far advanced, he decided upon taking up a position in rear of a village,-that is, to defer the battle until the next day, -in order to reconnoitre his front, a very prudent plan: and here again the private accounts coincide with the despatch. Whilst the engineers were marking out the encampment, the enemy advanced some guns and fired upon our skirmishers in front of the village, and the fire being answered, the whole of the Sikh field artillery opened, and it was evident that the enemy intended to fight. Accordingly, his lordship says, he drew up in order of battle, which of course commenced without the reconnoissance he had before felt to be necessary prior to an engagement, precisely as stated in the private accounts, which found upon this fact an implied censure. The attacking good troops in good positions, without a careful reconnoissance, is condemned in the strongest terms by a commander who carried the headlong system of tactics further than any of his contemporaries. Napoleon, writing (through his minister of war) to Marshal Jourdan, on the subject of the battle of Talavera, said: "Tant qu'on voudra attaquer de bonnes troupes, comme les Anglaises, dans de bonnes positions, sans les reconnostre et s'assurer si on peut les enlever, on conduira des hommes à la mort en pure perte."

The British artillery having cannonaded the spot, supposed to be the enemy's centre, for an hour, and his fire appearing, "if not silenced, sufficiently disabled to justify an advance upon his position," the Commander-in-Chief—as the private accounts state, and as his own despatch implies, without knowing what was the nature of that position, or what new arrangements the enemy had made to meet an onward movement of the British—pushed his divisions at different points into the jungle, where the enemy, probably calculating upon the tactics of the British general and the bull-dog properties of his troops, seems to have laid a trap for them.

Campbell's division (the left) advanced against a point where the enemy, the despatch says, " seemed not to have many guns;" and it is very evident from both accounts that, although the determination of these troops in the end balanced the odds against them, they were exposed, in the midst of a jungle, to batteries on either flank, and a large body of infantry in front, of which they had no previous knowledge, the leading brigade (that of the gallant Pennycuick) suffering dreadfully, and being obliged to retire. Lord Gough ascribes this "temporary advantage of the enemy" to the brigade pressing forward too rapidly, in consequence of which the Europeans outstripped the native troops: the private accounts attribute it to the murderous cross-fire from the Sikh batteries, which had not been observed; and to the want of proper support. Of these modes of accounting for the loss,-not legitimate reasons for it,the latter seems the most probable, the eager advance of the troops, in such circumstances, being an act not merely of military judgment, but of self-preservation.

Of the right attack, by Gilbert's division, no details are given in the despatch; it is said to have been "most praise-worthy and successful," and the division is reported to have "nobly maintained the character of the Indian army, taking and spiking the enemy's guns in their front, and dispersing the Sikhs wherever they were seen." The private accounts represent the brigades of this division as moving forward through dense jungle, coming upon masses of Sikh infantry so numerous that they were outflanked, and obliged to retire through the terrific fire of musketry on all sides. 'The conduct of Pope's brigade of cavalry on the flank of Gilbert's (the right) division, in retreating pellmell upon the horse artillery, as stated by the private accounts, riding down the gunners, and not stopping their course until they had reached the field hospital, is, perhaps judiciously, veiled by the Commander-in-Chief in general terms; but we cannot reconcile the reports contained in private letters of the misbehaviour of the 5th Light Cavalry, part of Sir Joseph Thackwell's force, on the extreme left, with the distinct declaration of Lord Gough, that, with the exception of the "misapprehension," under which Brigadier Pope's brigade "got into much confusion," the "conduct of the troops generally was most exemplary." This is not the only instance in which the private accounts appear chargeable with inventions disparaging to the British arms; for they state that five of our colours fell into the hands of the enemy, of which Lord Gough says not a word, and even the loss of four of our guns is rather implied than admitted.

With these exceptions, the private accounts are perfectly reconcilable with the official despatch; they are fuller, and ostensibly more candid, but they are not incongruous; and, taking the accounts conjointly, we adhere to the opinion, that it is due to the army and to the character of the Commander-in-Chief that an inquiry should be instituted into the circumstances attending this calamitous "victory."

THE dinner given to Sir Charles Napier by the Court of Directors will be regarded as the celebration of one of those extraordinary political compromises with which the world makes merry at the expense of the parties. In the course of three short moons, we see Sir Charles and the Court at daggers-drawn, and anon sitting down to "a grand complimentary dinner," Sir J. W. Hogg and Sir Charles, almost cheek by jowl, on the same side of the Chairman of the Court. Unlike the "monstrous coalition" betwixt Lord North and Mr. Fox, this coalition is highly creditable to both the parties. The Court felt, with her Majesty's Government, that there was a dignus vindice nodus, and that none was so fit to act the deus as Sir Charles Napier; and they made a ready sacrifice of petty resentments upon the altar of the nation's welfare. Sir Charles, to whom the nomination to his high post, at a season of great difficulty, solely because he was the best man to meet the emergency, is the proudest amende honorable he can desire, could have no difficulty in forgetting that he had been, in his own opinion, "ill-used." The eulogies pronounced upon the gallant officer by the Chairman of the Court of Directors, and the confidence expressed by him in the cordial feeling of the Court towards him,accompanied though it was by the sly hint, that " least said is soonest mended,"-may be regarded as a kind of public shaking of hands, and the union between the two parties, like that of a fractured bone, will become all the stronger from their temporary severance.

It is no slight consolation to find the Duke of Wellington and Lord Hardinge declaring that the state of affairs in the Punjab is not one that should be considered as an extraordinary emergency, or be regarded with gloom and discouragement. None of the speakers went out of their way to defend Lord Gough; Lord Hardinge referred to the recent battle as creating a momentary depression, "on account of the difficulties of the ground," and the great Duke suggested that, as his Lordship's period of service would soon expire, "he will be desirous of returning to his country;" but the significant manner in which Lord John Russell communicated to the House of Commons, on the 5th of March, the fact that he had given certain advice to Her Majesty relative to the state of affairs in the Punjab, leads to a conclusion that an accommodation to Lord Gough was not the only motive for the appointment of a successor, and that successor Sir Charles Napier.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of the East India Company was held at their House, on Wednesday the 21st instant,-Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. L. Lushington, G.C.B., in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN informed the Court that the motion, of which notice was given by Mr. Poynder, "That the petitions presented to the Court upon the subject of Juggernauth, and other temples in India, be taken into consideration by the Court of Proprietors," was to have come on to-day; but unfortunately, since that notice was given, an event had occurred which he was sure the whole Court would deeply regret (hear, hear)-Mr. Poynder departed this life on Sunday last. He had received a letter from the son of that excellent man, informing him of the sad event. Of course, therefore, the motion could not be entered upon.

Mr. STRACHAN, after passing a high eulogium on the character of Mr. Poynder, expressed his hope that the question to which that gentleman had so long devoted his energies would not be left unadjusted, but would be kept in remembrance by the Court, and that they would consider whether it might not be possible to settle it consistently with justice to the natives of India, and at the same time in accordance with the Christian feelings of the people of this country. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Marriott, Mr. Twining, and Mr. Hankey, spoke in high commendation of the great public exertions of the late Mr. Poynder in all matters that involved the interests of the Company, and bore testimony to the loyal, disinterested, and Christian spirit, which actuated the whole course of that lamented gentleman's conduct during the many years he had taken part in the proceedings of that Court.

BOOTY AT HYDERABAD.

Col. Dickinson moved that copies of all correspondence which had passed between the Court of Directors and the Board of Control regarding the booty captured at Hyderabad be laid before the Court of Proprietors. It was well known that a correspondence was now in circulation, in which the Court of Directors was charged with a culpable disregard of the just claims of the army, by whose gallantry the conquest of Scinde was achieved, in withholding the customary recommendation to her Majesty for the division among its captors of the booty obtained on that occasion. These were grave and unexampled charges, emanating as they did from a public functionary, high in rank, and still higher in military fame. It was to be regretted that in a military code, so perfect in most respects, there should be an omission of any sufficiently defined rule for guarding against the possibility of misconception, on the part either of the troops or their commanding officer, as to which of the parties a sum in this instance amounting to 270,000 rupees should, in conformity with the usage of the Indian army, unequivocally

The CHAIRMAN rose to order. He would submit it to the general Court of Proprietors, whether, under all the circumstances, it would be wise, expedient, or proper, that they should enter into any discussion as to any difference of opinion that might have existed between any member in the Company's service and the Court of Directors. (Hear, hear.)

Col. Dickinson hoped he might be allowed to finish what he had to say. He was not about to cast any imputation on the Court of Directors.

Mr. CLARKE admitted the right of the gallant proprietor to proceed, but would, at the same time, submit to him whether it rould not be better to avoid entering into so delicate and difficult a subject.

Col. DICKINSON considered himself justified in pressing this matter upon the attention of the Court. Should the papers he now asked for be produced, he hoped they would place before the Court and the public, in a manner not to be questioned, the purity of the motives by which the Court of Directors had been actuated as regarded the appropriation of the Scinde booty. On the 21st February, 1844, it was stated by their then Chairman that the Court of Directors had recorded its deliberate and solemn conviction of the injustice and impolicy of the annexa-tion of Scinde. The gallant proprietor concluded by moving for the papers.

Mr. Sullivan seconded the motion.

The CHAIRMAN said there was no such correspondence as that which the hon. and gallant proprietor referred to.

Mr. Lewin said the real question was, whether justice had been done to Sir Charles Napier by the Court of Directors having awarded him a 16th instead of an eighth of the prize-money. The CHAIRMAN deprecated any discussion on the subject. Under all the circumstances, he thought the Court would see that no possible good could arise from it. The Lords of the Treasury had settled the question, having awarded Sir Charles Napier an eighth, and no power now existed to disturb that arrangement.

The motion was then put and negatived.

Mr. Sullivan moved that copies of all correspondence between the British political agent at Lahore and the government of Lahore in the years 1845 and 1846 be laid before the Court. He had read the speeches of the Duke of Wellington, the late Governor-General, the President of the Board of Control, and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, made at the entertainment given on Saturday last to the new Commander-in-Chief in India, and it must be very satisfactory to hear from those high authorities that the affairs of India afforded no ground of apprehension, that they were then only under the influence of a passing cloud, that the sun would soon shine again that there were between 50,000 and 60,000 troops in the Punjab, with plenty of guns and ammunition, and that they would speedily put down what was called the Sikh insurrection. He had no doubt, if he were placed in the same happy condition with those noble lords and right honourable gentlemen, and was the owner of plenty of acres, and had plenty of money in his purse, he should be induced to take the same cheerful view of things; but being a man of limited fortune, and what little money he had being invested in the Company's funds, he might be excused for entertaining gloomy thoughts and having some scruples and doubts as to the stability of their Indian empire. His conviction was, that both their financial and political position in India had never been so critical for the last half century as it was at the present moment. He considered their financial position to be worse than when the Company was obliged to borrow at 10 per cent. without having any revenue in the treasury, because then they had the prospect of being able to surmount their difficulties by a reduction of the expenditure, and by having resources to fall back upon which now no longer existed. The course they were now pursuing must end in irretrievable financial embarrassment. Within the last ten years their debt had increased from 30,000,000l. to 40,000,000l., and the annual charge from 1,500,000l. to nearly 2,000,000l. They were now draining India of specie in order to provide for the wants of the home treasury, and by making money scarce in India, they necessitated taxation in that country. If they went on in this way they would soon be obliged to raise a loan at an unusually high rate of interest, without having any resources to fall back upon, for they could not increase any of the taxes of that country. It was a matter of great regret, that the territories, which under the dominion of the Mogul, after supporting a large establishment, left a considerable surplus revenue, had never, since it had been in the possession of the East-India Company, been equal to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government. The greater the extent of territory possessed by the Company, the greater was the expense incurred beyond the revenue derived. For these reasons he submitted that their financial position was such as And what was their political claimed their serious attention. position? Had they one cordial friend or ally from Cape Comorin to Delhi, or from the Ganges to the Indus? Were they quite sure that they had a footing in the Punjab? If they had, what meant that expression of Lord Gough's, that he was surrounded by a hostile peasantry? By the last accounts it appeared that the Sikhs and the Affghans, the Mahomedans and the Hindoos, had shaken hands and were in hostile array against the British power. Whence that spirit of hostility? It was because for the last few years they had lost sight of all political prudence and regard for principle. It could not be too often reiterated, that it was the invasion of Affghanistan which led to the invasion of Scinde, and that it was the invasion of Scinde which led to the invasion of the Punjab. He knew it was the fashion here to say that the Sikh invasion of our territory was a wanton aggression, but he would ask in what respect that invasion differed from our Scinde invasion? Only in this, that the latter was a wanton invasion, while the former had the plea of self-defence. Seeing what had been our conduct towards Scinde, the Sikhs naturally expected that they would be the next to be attacked, and determined to anticipate the blow. He would leave it to the jurists to determine whether they had not a fair causa belli. The hon, proprietor then read a private communication which he had received, setting forth a series of acts of aggression against the Sikhs by the Indian Government, which went to show that, from the very beginning, the English had been the aggressors; and it was for the purpose of ascertaining whether those facts were well founded that he now moved for the production of the correspondence set forth in his

Col. Dickinson seconded the motion.

The CHAIRMAN said that the hon. gentleman had made some statements, regarding which he (the Chairman) wished to set the Court right. With respect to the exportation of bullion from India he could assure the Court that nothing of the sort now took place. It had long ceased. (Cheers.) It was the first time in his recollection that an unprovoked invasion had been justified on the ground of self defence. The hon, gentleman had stated that we had no friends or allies from Cape Comorin to Delhi; on the contrary, he (the Chairman) was happy to say that every state throughout India was in alliance with us, except in that part of the country where the war was now being carried on. There could be no doubt that Runjeet Sing was a faithful ally, and he did not think that any blame could be attached to what had been done with regard to the treaties and correspondence with Runjeet Sing. With regard to the motion, he did not think it proper to lay papers before the Court, while hostilities were pending; it would be unwise and inexpedient to give publicity to correspondence regarding any negotiations that were going on or until the whole business was settled. For his own part, he had no apprehension as to how that settlement would be effected. It was quite certain that the British army would conquer, and they might be equally assured that that course which was just and right would be pursued by the Indian Government. (Cheers.)

Mr. Weeding expressed his entire approval of the course pursued by the Court of Directors, and was of opinion that it would be the happiest thing for all parties if the whole of the Punjab were taken under the dominion of the British Govern-

After a few words from Mr. Sullivan in reply,

The motion was put, and negatived by a large majority. The Court then adjourned.

DINNER TO SIR CHARLES NAPIER.

On the 17th March, the Chairman and Court of Directors of the Hon. East-India Company gave a grand complimentary din-ner to General Sir Charles J. Napier, on the eve of his departure to assume the functions of Commander-in-Chief of the armies in India, at the London Tavern.

Sir J. Lushington, the Chairman of the Hon. East-India Company, presided. On his right sat Sir Charles Napier, G.C.B.; the Duke of Wellington, K.G.; the Marquis of Breadalbane, K.T.; the Marquis of Clanricarde, K.P.; Vis-Breadalbane, K. I.; the Marquis of Chamberle, R. I.; varcount Hardinge, G.C.B.: Lord Campbell; the Right Hon. Sir
J. Hobhouse; Mr. Wigram; the Right Hon. Sir G. Grey, Bart.; the Right Hon. Sir F. Baring, Bart.; the Right Hon.
the Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Right Hon. Sir G. Arthur,
The Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Right Hon. Sir G. Arthur,
The Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Right Hon. Sir G. Arthur, Bart.; Sir T. M'Mahon, Bart.; Sir H. Verney, Bart.; Sir J. W. Hogg, Bart.; Sir G. Pollock, G. C. B.; the Solicitor-Genew. Hogg, Date; Sir G. Pollock, G. C. B.; the Solicitor-General; Sir G. W. Anderson. And on the left, the Duke of Norfolk, K. G.; the Deputy-Chairman; the Marquis of Sligo; the Earl of Clare, K. P.; Viscount Jocelyn; the Right Hon. Fox Maule; the Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Bart.; Mr. Mills; the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington; the Right Hon. H. Labouchere; the Right Hon. R. L. Sheil; the Right Hon. W. G. Hayter; Sir C. Sullivan, Bart.; Sir R. Campbell, Bart.; Sir A. Rothschild, Bart.; Sir J. Caldwell, G. C. B., and Sir C. Trevelyan, K. C. G.

The cloth having been removed, the Chairman gave, in succession, the healths of "Her Most Gracious Majesty," "the Queen Dowager," "His Royal Highness Prince Albert, Albert Prince of Wales, and the rest of the royal family," which were severally drunk with all the honours.

The Chairman then rose and said,-My lords and gentlemen, we are assembled this evening expressly to receive and do honour to the gallant officer on my right, upon the occasion of his appointment as Commander-in-Chief of the army in India, (Loud cheers.) Called upon by the Queen to take the command of her Majesty's troops, the Court of Directors have conferred upon Sir Charles Napier the command of the forces of the East-India Company. We must all feel the greatest confidence in the qualifications of that gallant officer for military command. (Loud cheers.) The victory of Meeanee reiterated with most impressive force a lesson often before inculcated in Indian warfare. It taught that an able and devoted commander may infuse his own spirit into the native soldier, and that success is the result of discipline in the soldier, of skill and science in the general. In placing the sword in the hands of Sir Charles Napier, we feel that his former distinguished services are the best possible security and pledge of what we may expect from him. The gloom which recent accounts from India have cast over the public mind will, we trust, prove transient. We hope it will have passed away before the gallant officer can assume his command; but if, when he arrives in India, there should unhappily be a necessity for continued military operations, we are quite sure their conduct could not be confided to abler hands, and that the sword will never be replaced in the scabbard but with honour and glory. I know you will all join me in the sincere desire that the health of the gallant officer may remain firm, and that he may return to his country with increased fame and additional claims on the gratitude of the British public. I call upon you to do all honour to the toast I have now to propose,—"the health of the gallant Sir Charles Napier, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army in India." (Drunk with three times three, and one cheer more.)

Sir Charles Napier said, - My lords and gentlemen, I thank you for the honour you have done me in drinking my health, and also the Chairman for the compliments which he has been so kind as to pay me. I go to India at the command of her Majesty, by the recommendation of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and I believe I go also with the approbation of my countrymen. (Much cheering.) My lords and gentlemen, I might well have been excused, had I declined under the pretence that I have not ability to sustain such a command in the trying circumstances of the present hour. Two considerations prevented my declining this grand and honourable command. The first was, that I have the kind advice and assistance of the greatest soldier in the world. (Loud cheers.) The next was, that I go forth with the most full and perfect confidence in the support and cordial co-operation which I shall receive from her Majesty's Ministers and the Hon. Court of Directors. (Loud cheers.) But at present, my lords and gentlemen, you will, I think, all agree with me that the old proverb applies,—"Least said is soonest mended;" and that I should conclude by praying to God that I may not disappoint the confidence of her Majesty, the recommendation of his Grace the Commander-in-Chief, the expectations of the Court of Directors, and the confidence of the people of England. (Loud cheers.)

The Chairman then gave, "The health of Sir Francis Baring and the Navy."

Sir F. Baring returned thanks.

The Chairman. - Most sincerely do I rejoice, as I am sure you all do, that we have on this occasion the honour of the presence of his Grace the Commander-in-Chief. (Loud cheers.) Long may he be spared to serve her Majesty in that capacity. (Loud cheers.) The East-India Company must ever remember with pride and satisfaction that in their territories sprang the first germ of that laurel which so abundantly encircles the crown of the illustrious Duke, whose career of glory and renown has been the admiration of the world, and entitled him to the eternal gratitude of his countrymen. (Loud cheers.) I am sure you will give the most cordial reception to the toast of "his Grace the Duke of Wellington and the Army."

The Duke of Wellington. - Mr. Chairman, my lords, and gentlemen, in my own behalf, and on behalf of the army, I beg leave to return you thanks for the honour you have done me in drinking my health, and for the notice you have taken of the military service. I trust that the army will long continue to deserve the approbation of such societies as I now see before me. (Cheers.) Mr. Chairman, I have frequently enjoyed your hospitality on occasions of festivals which you have given upon the appointment of governors-general, governors, and commanders-in-chief of the armies at your different presidencies; but I have never attended with more satisfaction than upon the present occasion. (Cheers.) The officer whom you have selected to command your armies in the East Indies has been distinguished already in that country by his public services. (Loud cheers.) He has conducted most important and difficult operations, under most trying circumstances, with the utmost ability. He has fought general actions extraordinarily well contested by the enemy with uniform success. (Loud cheers.) He has shown that he deserved the confidence of the Government he served, and of the troops he commanded. (Cheers.) It is not, therefore, surprising that those whose duty it is to advise the Sovereign, and those intrusted by law with the administration of the British Government in India, should have selected my hon, and gallant friend to be commander-in-chief in present circumstances.

As the period of the service of the noble lord who now commands in India will soon expire, and he will be desirous of returning to his country, it is desirable that an officer of such distinguished services and ability as my hon, and gallant friend should be on the spot to take command of the army. (Cheers.) It is well known that I do not consider the existing state of things as one of most extraordinary emergency. (Cheers.) I have seen that the object of the war has been attained. (Cheers.) A great fortress, which it was perfectly necessary to possess, in order to maintain our power, has fallen into our hands, after a long siege, by the unqualified surrender of the enemy. True, great loss has been sustained; but I must say, if we are to fight great battles,-if great risks are to be run,we must expect to incur losses in the attainment of great ends. (Cheers.) If such actions could be fought, and such victories gained, without loss, it might be considered that little honour was acquired in achieving them. While, therefore, I do consider it most important that such a man as my hon, and gallant friend should be at the head of the armies in India, I cannot look at the circumstances of the moment in that country to be such as should be regarded with gloom or discouragement. I am glad my hon. and gallant friend has taken the (Cheers.) I have done everything in my command there. power to accomplish that object, both with my hon, and gallant friend and elsewhere (cheers); and I have no doubt, if occasion should offer, my hon, and gallant friend will so conduct himself as to do honour to himself and to satisfy this country by some of the most splendid successes of which it has ever received the account. (Loud and continued cheering )

The Chairman said, he had hoped to be honoured on this occasion by the presence of the Prime Minister of the country, but he had not been able to be there; and he read a letter from Lord John Russell, stating that he had company at his own house, and was therefore compelled to be absent on an occasion which he should gladly have taken to express his strong sense of the military genius of Sir Charles Napier, and his respect for the Court of Directors, who administer with so much ability the proposed, "the health of Sir George Grey and her Majesty's Ministers."

Sir G. Grey. - In the name of my colleagues, and in my own behalf, I offer to you our sincere thanks for the honour you have just conferred upon us. I beg to assure you of the deep sense her Majesty's Government feels of the magnitude and importance of those interests which are connected with that vast and magnificent empire in India which has been subjected by Providence to British rule. I beg also to assure you, if such an assurance can be needed, of our earnest and anxious desire cor-dially to co-operate with the Board of Directors in every measure calculated to maintain the integrity and security of that vast empire, and at the same time to diffuse throughout its wide extent those inestimable blessings of peace and civilization, the fruits of a mild, enlightened, and beneficent rule, which are the only foundation of permanent prosperity. (Loud cheers.) It would ill become me, in the presence of the illustrious Duke who has addressed you, and after what has fallen from him, to advert to the high military reputation of the gallant and distinguished the state of the state o guished officer who has been selected by his Sovereign, with the concurrence of the Court of Directors, with the full and entire confidence of her Majesty's Government, and I may add, as the gallant general has himself said, with the entire approbation of responsible post of commander-in-chief of the forces in India.

(Cheers.) He bears a name which is associated with many a well-fought field. (Cheers.) He belongs to a race of which Englishmen may well be proud,—a race which in both services, by sea and land, when called by their Sovereign to lead her fleets or armies to battle, will furnish men possessing those qualities to which you, Sir, so ably alluded, inspiring all who are placed under their command with that entire and unwavering confidence which is the surest guarantee of victory. (Loud cheers.) Sir Charles Napier leaves this country with an expectation,—and, from what we know of his history and services, I need not say a well-founded expectation,—that if called on in India, at the head of that gallant army which in so many a field has won for itself imperishable renown, to resist aggression or repel attack, he will add new lustre to his own well-earned fame. Cheers.) He leaves this country with the earnest aspirations of his fellow-countrymen that the time may not be far distant (when that sword which you have placed in his hands may be returned to its scabbard with honour and glory,-I trust it will not be returned till it can with honour and glory be returned to its scabbard (loud and continued cheering); and that the gallant general will not only by his skill and valour in the field, but by his wisdom, experience, and moderation in council, give the aid of his great talents and powerful mind to the noble lord who with so much ability fills the office of Governor-General in India, thereby establishing a just, honourable, and lasting peace, and thus laying the foundation of the permanent prosperity of the British empire in India. (Loud cheers.)

of the India Board," which was drunk with much applause.

Sir John C. Hobhouse - I am most happy to meet you on this auspicious occasion, and to confirm what has been said by my right bon. friend the Secretary of State. Her Majesty's Ministers congratulate you and the country on the choice you have made of a Commander-in-chief. You have done your duty manfully, wisely, and generously, in a manner which shows that you are aware of the great position you hold, the character you have to maintain, and the momentous destinies under your conhave to maintain, and the momentous destinies under your control. It remains for the gallant general to do his duty. That he will do it, I, in common with my colleagues, most confidently believe. (Cheers.) After what has been said by the noble Duke on his right hand, it would be idle for me to say another word on that subject. He goes to perform no inconsiderable task—to maintain your great empire, and, if another consideration may be mentioned next to that, to maintain his own great reputation. He goes to show that you have not formed too high an estimate of his zeal, of his energy, of that capacity which has hitherto shown him equal to all duties, which you think, and I believe most justly, will prove him equal to any emergency to which he can possibly be called. The gallant general is not one of those who commit the fatal mistake of. undervaluing his opponents. He knows well the foe with whom he may have to contend. He knows that the nation, if nation it can be called, now in arms against you is one of the most formidable that ever met us on the battle-field of India; and this would be enough to daunt any man who belonged to another race, who was conscious of less virtue, and who had not to command soldiers he had formerly led to victory, who now wore on their breasts the medals of Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sobraon. In treating with this people he will have to make use of that moderation which belongs to power; for the powerful and the great can afford to be moderate. To my noble friend on my left (Viscount Hardinge) we owe, among other things, the exhibi-tion of that moderation which only great and victorious nations can afford to give to the vanquished. And if on this occasion the gallant general is sent to contend against your enemies, he has at least one of the best guarantees of victory, namely, the justice of his cause; for, from the moment of the invasion which my gallant friend on my left repelled from the moment the Sikhs crossed the frontier and the Sutlej from the hour of victory, which was the hour of moderation, while we governed them because they asked us to govern them-from first to last, we have shown them that we knew not only what were their duties as subjects, but our duties as conquerors. The noble Duke has told you, with an authority which can come from no-body but him, but which comes home to our business and bosoms as Englishmen, that it would be idle to talk of what has occurred in India as any great reverse. We have not forgotten the campaigns of Mysore and Nepaul. the long struggles with the Mahrattas. We have not forgotten the days when the Nepaulese came to Benares-when even Bhurtpore foiled the successful general and almost broke the heart of the gallant Ochterlony. All these things have happened in my own time and yours; but what has been the great and general result? It has been this—your zeal, energy, persever-ance, skill have triumphed over all obstacles and enemies, and we are now met here to welcome the general who, crowned with imperishable laurels, goes to India to take command of our armies. I have no doubt whatever that under Providence he will assist in accomplishing the great destinies of British India, and when he does restore into your hands the command with which you have this day invested him he will have applied to him the words which one of your Governors General, then Governor of Madras-Lord William Bentinck-addressed to the great captain, the Duke of Wellington, "You leave this command amidst the regrets of all-of all, both civilians and military-of all, both Europeans and natives." (Loud cheers.) This is true fame, unmixed with any regrets, and that it will be the result of the gallant General's exploits I believe from the bottom of my heart; and you who give the impulse to it will be the best rewarded. (Cheers.)
The Chairman then gave "the Health of the Governor-General, the Earl of Dalhousie." (Cheers ) It is but just to say that in the difficult and trying position in which he has been placed, the firmness, the vigour, and the good sense which have characterized all his measures entitle him to our sincere gratitude, and he has received the cordial approbation and thanks of the home authorities. (Cheers.) I am happy to state that the report which has been in circulation that his Lordship's health had failed is unfounded. I have myself received a letter of a very late date, in which he says that his trip to the northward has completely restored his health, which I trust will continue unimpaired, that we may long have the benefit of his valuable services. (Loud cheers.)

The next toast was "the Civil Service of India," which was acknowledged by Mr. W. Bird.

"The Indian Army" was then toasted in connection with the name of Sir James Caldwell, who briefly acknowledged the compliment.

Sir J. Hobhouse. - I take the liberty of giving a toast which, although it usually comes from the person in the situation I now hold, I give with the utmost cordiality-it is the health of our gallant chairman. (Cheers.) It has fallen to my lot to fill the office which her Majesty's favour has placed me in longer per-baps than any President of the India Board. During that time it has been my very good fortune to have much intercourse with Sir J. Lushington, and I can truly say that, whether in business of the utmost importance or in matters of trivial amount I have found him feelingly alive to your interests and to your honour, without forgetting, whilst he is a managing Director of the East-India Company, what belongs to our common country. (Cheers.)

The Chairman. - I have passed my whole life in the service of the East-India Company, formerly as a soldier, and latterly as a civilian; but in whatever capacity I served, my reward has been your approbation. (Cheers.) I trust that the Chairman of the East-India Company, and the Directors generally, will never find any difficulty in doing that which they consider for the benefit of the country and the prosperity of our Indian empire. (Cheers.) With regard to the gallant officer on my right, I have a perfect conviction that he is the man that should go to India. (Cheers.) I am quite sure I am speaking the sentiments of the Court of Directors when I say that they have the same confidence in him that the Government has expressed through the Secretary of State. (Cheers.) I only hope he may speedily return to this country covered with fresh honour and glory. (Cheers.) For myself, I know my services are drawing to a close, but while I live I shall feel the greatest interest in the prosperity of the East-India Company. (Cheers.)

then drunk.

The last toast was "the Health of the late Governor-General of India, Viscount Hardinge," whose administration had been so brilliant cheers), and who had shared in all the perils of the late campaign on the banks of the Sutlej.

The toast was drunk with much cheering.

Viscount Hardinge.—I feel very grateful for the cordial man-ner in which you have drunk my health. I never can forget the deep debt of gratitude which I owe to the East-India Company for the manner in which my services were received on my return from India. I will also say that those services were received by her Majesty's late and present Government with an approbation which entirely satisfied the utmost bounds of my ambition. (Cheers.) I can never forget the great debt of gratitude and obligation which I owe to that glorious Indian army, the native portion of which has always emulated the services and bravery of the British portion, and on all occasions nobly upheld its former reputation (cheers), I will add more especially on those occasions which came under my own observation, when the army was commanded by my noble, brave, and intrepid friend Lord Gough. (Loud cheers.) I have received this evening the greatest satisfaction from the manly, judicious speech of my noble friend the Duke of Wellington. I am of opinion with his Grace that there is no room for gloom under existing circumstances. (Cheers.) I will say, from every observation of that gallant army, that it is equal to cope with any difficulty with which it may be surrounded. (Cheers.) I left on the frontier, in the beginning of last year, 54,000 men, 124 field guns, 100 siege guns. It has since been reinforced by the Bombay army. Our force within the Punjab exceeds 60,000 men and 250 pieces of cannon. When was there before such an army collected in India? Never, I believe (cheers); and I have the greatest confidence in the result. There may be a momentary depression on account of the difficulties of the ground, but that army will be triumphant. (Cheers.) The appointment of my gallant friend, Sir C. Napier, is the best that could be made. (Cheers.) He knows very well this is no merely congratulatory speech of mine for the occasion. He knows that, when we were struggling under much more serious difficulties on the Sutlej than at present exist in the Punjab, I felt it my duty to send for him from Scinde expressly to be second in command of the army. (Cheers, The Duke of Wellington is also aware that when I was asked who, in my opinion, should succeed Lord Gough when his term of command should expire, I named my gallant friend SirCharles
Napier. (Cheers.) He has that capacity and power of securing the confidence of his soldiers that, whenever he leads, and they go into action, they always feel that with him the day of battle is sure to be the day of victory. (Loud cheers.)

The band of the Coldstream Guards was in attendance, and played appropriate military airs at intervals during the evening.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR C. J. NAPIER. - On the 17th March, a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when General Sir Charles James Napier, G.C.B., was sworn in Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces, and an Extraordinary Member of the Council of India.

MR. BELL.-At a Court of Directors, on the 14th March, Alexander Bell, Esq., was appointed a Provisional Member of Council at Bombay.

BRIGADIER PENNYCUICK, who, with his self-devoted, heroic son, fell in the recent battle on the Jelum, entered the army in 1807. His first campaign was in Java in 1811; he was wounded severely, having fought so well as to draw forth the public approbation of Sir Samuel Auchmuty and the celebrated Col. Gillespie. In 1811 he was at the storming of Djokjo Kerta. In 1813, having command of a small detachment, he displayed such skill and courage, defeating an immense body of insurgents, that he obtained the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of Java, and the public approbation of the Governor-General of India, Lord Hastings. He fought again, with distinction, in 1814, at the assault of Boni, in the Celebes; and during 1825 and 1826 he served against the Burmese. In 1839 he fought under Sir J. Keane and Brigadier Willshire, at the storming of Ghuznee and of Khelat, and was the foremost man to enter the last-named fortress. In 1841 he marched out of Aden, at the head of 600 men, and gave a signal overthrow to the Arabs. In 1846 he served under Sir Charles Napier, in Scinde, and gained the esteem of that general. In 1848 he commanded a brigade in the Punjab, under Lord Gough, and on the 13th of January, 1849, he died in battle, thus closing a on the 13th of January, 1549, ne used in bactor, career full of honour with a soldier's death, and upon his yet warm body fell his young son, worthy of such a father. 24th regiment marched on the 13th of January against the Sikh army; it was unsupported, exposed to the full sweep of Sikh batteries, and to the deadly play of their destructive musketry. More than one half of the regiment went down in ten minutes; the remainder, still stricken by the artillery, assailed by thousands of infantry, and menaced by swarms of cavalry, could no longer keep their ground. The elder Pennycuick had fallen, and two soldiers attempted to carry him off while still breathing, but the Sikhs pressed them so closely that, unable to contend, they dropped their honourable burden and drew back. His gallant son, only seventeen years old, now first aware of his misfortune, sprang forward, sword in hand, bestrode his father's body for a moment, and then fell across it, a corpse! - Times.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS. - The Persia, Northumberland, Time and Truth, Essex, Plantagenet, Dalhousie, and Lady Macdonald, have been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Bengal.

The Marquess of Wellesley, in a letter to the Marquess of Londonderry, says of Lord Castlereagh: "During the whole of my administration, he never interfered in the slightest degree in the vast patronage of our Indian empire, and he took especial care to signify this determination to the expectants by whom he was surrounded, and to me."- Castlereagh Papers.

THE CHINESE LANGUAGE is by far the most inflexible of all languages; and has preserved in a fixed or crystalized state that earliest stage in the development of speech, in which every word corresponded to or represented a substantial object in the outward world.

The influence of religion, the vast superiority of monotheism to idolatry, was strongly felt by M. Tchihatcheff, in his journey to the frontiers of China from Russia, when, in crossing the steppes of the Kirgheez, he quitted the pagan Mongols and came amongst a tribe of Mahomedans. The emotion felt on entering their country, he says, could only be compared to that which the first sight of a Christian church had often excited in him after a long abode amongst Mahomedans.

Rengal does not seem to have enjoyed much consequence before foreigners were attracted thither for mercantile purposes. The silence of the old Hindu writers would incline us to the belief that it is for the most part alluvial land, and that originally the lower provinces were, in a great measure, comprehended in the unfathomed recesses of the deep. - Cal. Review.

The Sikhs are separated into two great divisions, the Sodees, followers of Nanak; and the Bedees, who recognize Govind. The first profess to be men of peace; the latter of war.

Capt. Abbott has written an "Account of the Battle-field of Alexander and Porus," which he maintains is almost identical with the position occupied by there Singh and his army on the Jelum.

SWITZERLAND, FROM THE RIGHI KULM.

AT THE PANORAMA ROYAL, LEICESTER SQUARE, a sublime and beautiful VIEW of SWITZERLAND, taken from the Righi Kulim, embracing nearly the whole of that magnifeer country, innumerable cities, villages, lakes, the celebrated Fall of Rossberg, Mount Pilohe, with mountain above mountain, and terminating with the vast range of the snowy Alps.

The VIEWS OF PARIS AND POMPEII ARE ALSO NOW OPEN. Admission, is, each View, or 2s. 6d. to the three. Schools half-price. Much expense has been incurred in glving additional light to the vast Picture of Switzerland, which is in the large Rotunda.

TO LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLANDS' KALYDOR continues to maintain as an active, yet mild and soothing, estirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the period of Spring, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, emmently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally distinguished for safety in application, as for unfailing cilicacy in eradicating all redness, tan, pimples, spots, frecisles, discolorations, and other cutaneous visitations. The radiant bloom it imparts to the cheek, and the softness and delicacy which it induces on the hands and arms, render it indispensable to every tollet. To ladies during the period of nursing, and as a wash for infants, it cannot be too strongly recommended. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it aliay all irritation and tenderness of the skin, and render it soft, smooth, and pleasant. Its punifying and refreshing properties have obtained its exclusive selection by Her Majesty the Queen, the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and the several courts of Europe, together with the citate of the aristocracy, from the sultry climes of India to the frozen realms of the Crar.—Beware of spurious "KALYDORS" for sale, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the complexion, and by their repellent action endangering health. The words—"KONLANDS' KALYDOR" are on the wrapper of the genuine article; and the words "A. ROWLAND & Son, 20, Hatton Garden," are also engraved (by desire of the Hon. Commissioners) on the Government stamp affixed on each buttle. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Sold by the proprietors and by all respectable Chemists and perfumers.

DATENT ARTIFICIAL LEG.—Mr. HENRY BIGG ATENT ARTIFICIAL LEG.—Mr. HENRY BIGG and SON beg to inform the Medical Profession and the public that they have PATENTED an ARTIFICIAL LEG, which, in colour and every other respect, so closely resembles a natural one, as to defy at a short distance the detection of the most critical observer. Can be easily cleaned by washing, and there is not the slightest appearance of springs, &c., upon its surface, as in all others intherio constructed. Mr. Bigg and Son earnestly invite all requiring such artificial aid to inspect this valuable invention at their establishments, 29, Leicester Square, and 9, St. Thomas's Street, Southwark.

CHUBBS' LOCKS, FIRE-PROOF SAFES, and
perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also detect any attempt to open them. They are made of all sizes, and for every purpose to which locks are applied, and are strong, secure, simple, and durable.
CHUBBS' PATENT LATCH, for front doors, counting-house doors, &c., is simple in construction, low in price, and quite secure. The keys are particularly neat and portable.
CHUBBS' PATENT FIRE-PROOF SAFES, BOOKCASES, CHESTS, &c., made entirely of strong wrought iron, so as effectually to resist the falling of brick-work, timber, &c., in case of fire, and are also perfectly secure from the attacks of the most skilful burglars.
CHUBBS' CASH and DEED BOXES fitted with the detector locks.

Assurances are granted upon the lives of persons in every profession and station in life, and for every part of the world, with the exception, for the present, of the Western Coast of Africa within the Tropics.

The Rates of Premiums are constructed upon sound principles with reference to every Colony, and, by payment of a moderate addition to the Home Premium, in case of increase of risk, persons assured in this office may change from one climate to another, without forfeiting their Policies.

FOUR-FIFTER of the PROFITS are divided amongst the Assured, and the Bonus may, at their option, either be applied in augmentation of the sum assured, or in reduction of the annual premium, or its value may be received in cash.

NEW RATES OF PREMIUM.—The Directors of this Society, with the view of meeting the wishes of the large class of persons who prefer the present advantages of reduced premiums to a prospective bonus in the shape of an addition to their policies, have constructed a new Scale, based on the safest and most approved data, viz. the Experience Tables recently compiled by a Committee of Actuaries from the records of seventeen of the leading London offices.

The Society now offers the following advantages :-

The Lowest Scale of Premiums which can be safely adopted.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will shew the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 10th of May, 1848, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums. This will be found a liberal reduction if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

BEAUTIFUL TEETH.—ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEABL DENTIFICE,—a white powder, compounded of the choicest and most recherché ingredients of the Oriental herbal, of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. It extirpates all tartarous adhesions to the teeth, and insures a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface. Its anti-septic and anti-scorbutic properties exercise a highly beneficial and salutary influences they arrest the further progress of decay of the teeth, induce a healthy action of the gums, and cause them to assume the brightness and colour indicative of perfect soundness: while, by confirming their adhesion to the teeth, they give unlimited enjoyment and fresh zest to appetite, by perpetuating effective and complete mastication. The Proprietors of this Dentifrice pledge themselves that its efficacy in preserving and embellishing the teeth far surpasses anything of the kind ever yet offered to the public, and has, in consequence, obtained its selection by her Majesty the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns and Noblity throughout Europe.—Price 2s. 9d. per box. CAUTION.—To protect the public from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus,—"A. Row-Land and Sox, 20, Hatton Garden," to be engraved on the Government stamp, which is affixed on each box.

ROWLANDS' ALSANA EXTRACT, for relieving the tooth-ache, gumboils, and swelled face, and which, by constantly using, prevents those maladies. In the anguish of exeruciating pain, it affords instantaneous relief. It reperfectly innocent in its nature.—2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. per bottle. The Government Stamp, as on the "Odonto," is affixed on each bottle. Sold by the Proprietors, and by Chemists & Perfumers.—Beware of spurious initations! BEAUTIFUL TEETH.—ROWLANDS'

OR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Price 28. 6d.-Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and H.R.H. the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM. the Duchess of Kent.—Mr. THOMAS HOWARD'S SUCCEDANEUM, for stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soit state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, and arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Howard's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Prepared only by Mr. Thos. Howard, Surgeon-Dentist, 17, George-st., Hanover-square, who will send it into the country free by post. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Starkie, 4, Strand; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornbill, and all Medicine Vendors. Price 2s. 6d. Mr. Howard continues to supply the loss of teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. 17, George-street, Hanover-square. At home from 11 till 4.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF A BILIOUS ATTACK, INDIGESTION, AND FLATULENCY, CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Khairatee Khan, a native merchant of Patna, in the East Indies, suffered for years from bile, indigestion, and flatulency, and although he consulted the most eminent surgeous of the province, yet he derived no benefit from their treatment, but gradually became more debilitated. Having one day a severer attack than usual of those dreaded maladies, he determined to try Holloway's Pills, and this medicine, which has obtained such high repute throughout the world, very soon reinstated him in perfect health; and, in gratitute for the benefit, he desires this wonderful cure to be made public.

and, in gratitute for the beneat, the desires this wonderful cure to be made public.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native venders of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

THE PROPRIETOR of the LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE begs respectfully to remind families whose bereavements compel them to adopt Mourning attire, that every article (of the very best description) requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning may be had at his establishment at a moment's notice. Widow's and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note, descriptive of the Mourning required, will ensure every thing necessary for the occasion being sent immediately, either in town or into the country, and on the most reasonable terms. It is also to be observed that, as both millimers and dressmakers are constantly employed in making up articles in crape (at all times difficult), superiority in mode and unusual neatness may be relied on.

The London General Mourning Warehouse, 247, 249, and 251, Regent Street,—W. C. Jay, Proprietor.

NEW MAP OF THE PUNJAB

AND SIKH TERRITORIES.

Drawn by JOHN WALKER. On One Sheet, price 5s., or in a Case, 6s.

"A new Map of these districts has just been published by Messrs. ALLEN and Co., of Leadenhall Street, upon which apparently great care has been bestowed. The Map is very clearly printed, and the scenes of the military operations, to which so much interest is at present attached, are laid down with such perspicuity, that it would be easy to follow almost every march of the army. The Map is said to have been compiled from the most authentic sources of information."—Times, March 1, 1849.

"A new Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, just completed by Messrs. Allen, and compiled from the most authentic sources of information, with great care, contains all the places mentioned in the accounts of the military operations. At the present inoment, it is a most valuable publication, and we heartily recommend it."—Naval and Military Gazette, March 3, 1849.

"Mesers. Allen have just issued a finely-engraved Map of the Punjab and Sikh Territory, with due attention to the spots where our gallant troops have so valiantly fought. Who, at the present moment, would not pore over such a Map,—with interest point out where the brave Cureton fell, or where Edwardes earned the wreath that now adorns his youthful brow? Or, if we take a more painful glance, how many mothers, sisters, friends, will not, with mourned eyes, wander in their imagination along the banks of the Chenab, and mark the spot upon the Map where a son, a brother, or a friend lies buried in an honourable grave on the bloody field of Chillianwallah? And such a Map was wanting, and Messis. Alen's have at once provided one with great care and skill. This Map folds up in a neat cover, and can be earlied in the pocket."—Morning Chronicle, March 6, 1849.

"Messrs, Allen's Map is mounted on cloth, and compactly folded in a book-cover. The whole of the places on the banks of the Five Rivers are carefully and accurately indicated. The progress of the campaigns can be traced without the slightest difficulty."—United Service Gazette, March 10, 1849.

"This new Map of the Punjab, which has just been completed, is compiled from the latest and most authentic sources of information, and is unquestionably the fullest and most perfect Map of that, at the present period, most interesting district of India hitherto published. It has evidently been executed with great care, and contains all the places named in the accounts of the recent military operations clearly laid down."—Herald, March 14, 1849.

Progress of the PUNJAB, and of the Rise and Account of the Military Operations on the Banks of the Sutlej in 1846, and the Proclamations and Treaties of the Governor-General of India relating thereto. By THOMAS THORNTON, Esq. 2 vols. post 8vo. cloth lettered, price 21s.

"These volumes should be in the library of every one who feels an interest in the recent military exploits of our Army of the Sutlei, or mour future political relations of the Punjab. The work has, indeed, this double value;—it is valuable for present and permanent reference .....Independently, however, from any temporary interest which these volumes may derive from the recent events in the Punjab, they present much curious matter to the historical student, as well with regard to the religious character of the sect from which has sprung the warlike race of modern Sikha, as with respect to the character and policy of Runjeet Singh."—John Bull.

"The work gives all the information on the history and topography of the Punjab that could be desired; and in the fulness and completeness of its details, and the difference with which information has been collected, from every available source, constitutes this the best and most authentic work extant on the important country of which it treats."—Britannia.

"It is an authentic work, and its statements are perfectly trustworthy. Indeed, it will be necessary for every one having a library to add this to the historical department, while the miscellaneous reader will find a powerful claim in its novel and stirring information."—Cheltenham Journal.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THERE are sufficient grounds to conclude that the Sikh army under Shere Singh has at length sustained a complete overthrow, under circumstances, too, which add peculiar importance to the victory, inasmuch as it seems to have defeated a bold and skilful project of their leader, to turn the flank of Lord Gough (which he really accomplished), and to march upon Lahore, a part of his plan frustrated only by the opportune arrival of the Mooltan force on the left bank of the Chenab.

The only particulars of the event which have reached us at the moment of writing are contained in the Notification of the Governor-General, that Lord Gough attacked the Sikh army on the 21st February, in the neighbourhood of Goojerat, and routed it; that the enemy was beaten at every point, and retreated in disorder, leaving behind a great portion of his artillery, his ammunition, and his standing camp, and that the British troops were pursuing him when the last advices left. The private communications concur in all particulars with the official account, but add nothing beyond it.

The details of the operations which preceded this battle, contained in letters from the camp, are represented to be so confused and conflicting that neither of the Bombay journals has ventured upon compiling a narrative. The Delhi Gazette, which commands good means of information, has given a tolerably full report of those operations, which appears to be derived from authentic materials.

It results from that and other accounts, that, the Sikh army having received some reinforcements, on the 5th and 6th February, a large portion of it, with artillery, was moved about 6 miles to the right of Lord Gough's position, outflanking our army, and threatening its communications with Goojerat and the villages in its rear, harassing the grass-cutters and intercepting the daks. The Commander-in-Chief, having caution inculcated upon him by experience, or by cooler heads, remained close in his intrenched camp, waiting the arrival of the Mooltan force, making only such arrangements and dispositions as were required to ascertain and provide against the plans of the enemy. Beyond a few skirmishes, in which the Sikhs were worsted, nothing occurred of moment, until the 11th, when intelligence was brought to the camp that the enemy was advancing upon Burra Oomrah, about half a mile in front of the British position, to attack it, and the whole line was turned out in battle-array; but the Sikhs, after remaining drawn up in two strong columns, in sight of our camp, for two or three hours, apparently to invite an attack, and draw Lord Gough out of his strong position, withdrew.

On the following day, it was observed that the enemy's tents had been struck at Russool, and, in order to learn the cause of this movement,—especially as a large body of his troops, which had been posted at the north-east of a pass leading to Pooran and Khwar* (affording a practicable road from Ramnuggur to the town of Jelum), had not moved from their post at Kooree,—a reconnoitering party of cavalry, under Major-General Gilbert, was sent forward, which discovered that Russool had been abandoned by the enemy. This famous position was leisurely examined, and was found to be of immense strength, the natural advantages being improved by art. We subjoin the report of an eyewitness:—

"The position which the enemy have just vacated at Russool is immensely strong, and consists of a double line of intrenchments, in front of which they had planted large bushes in all directions, as well with the view of masking their position as to render the ground difficult for our cavalry to act upon. Beyond these, on the slope of the hill upon which their camp was pitched, was a battery, the ground about which was much broken; but still not sufficiently so to impede the advance of infantry. Passing over the site of this battery, towards the village of Russool, we crossed a narrow bridge (whether natural or artificial I cannot say) over a deep and rugged ravine. This it was that constituted the strength of the Sikh position. Had we on the 13th advanced upon this almost impregnable position, the Sikhs would, no doubt, have been able to resist our attack for many hours. The rear face of this natural fortress is a perpendicular wall of rock, along the base of which, in a perfectly level plain, I saw the Hydaspes threading its tortuous way. From this description you will understand how strong the defences of the Sikh position at Russool were, but yet it was not without its disadvantages. A well-conducted attack upon it by a force advancing along the creat of the ridge, at one extremity of which it stands, would have rendered the situation of the occupants most desperate, as then their only means of retreat would have been cut off; and, fully aware of the impossibility of carrying off their guns, under emergency, the enemy retired from it about three o'clock on the morning of the 13th, evidently with the hope that their movement might induce Lord Gough to make the attempt to storm it.

"As we retired from Russool, we passed down the battle-field of the 13th ult. Many bodies, both of Sikhs and of our own men, were discovered lying upon it. Among these the body of young Cureton was discovered, and identified by a portion of his uniform and some of the buttons, which still remained on the corpse. His remains were interred."

Simultaneously with this movement of the Sikh leader, reports were artfully circulated that he was in full retreat towards the Jelum, with the intention of crossing that river; whereas it appeared that his retrograde march extended no further than Pooran, on the north-west outlet of the pass before mentioned, and that he encamped at Needun and Chimbur, beyond Coira, evidently contemplating a move towards Goojerat.

On the 13th February, to the astonishment of the camp, a portion of the cavalry of General Whish's division of the Mooltan force arrived, having made forced marches in advance, the remainder of the force directing its march to Ramnuggur. During that day, the large body of the enemy stationed at Kooree kept its ground, and it appears that our intelligence department was so defective, that the Commander-in-Chief was in entire ignorance that the main body of the Sikh army, reported to have moved on the Jelum, had actually got into his rear, and on the 14th the enemy took the town of Goojerat, making prisoners of a detachment of Nicolson's Affghans, who occupied the fort. Upon receipt of this intelligence, and that the enemy threatened an immediate advance upon Wuzeerabad, the British army evacuated the fortified camp at Chillianwallah, early in the morning of the 15th, and reached Lussoorea (which they had quitted on the 12th January), and Suparee, where it was ascertained that the main body of the enemy was encamped at a place about seven miles on that side of Goojerat, which was occupied by him, and that Chuttur Singh had crossed to the left bank of the Jelum.

Meanwhile, General Whish was pushing on with Markham's (Bengal) brigade to Ramnuggur, which he reached on the 13th February. On the following day he learned that 500 Sikhs had crossed the Chenab at Wuzeerabad; whereupon he detached a portion of his force thither, under Lieut.-Colonel Byrne, who found the Sikhs on the right bank of the river (Wuzeerabad being on the left), 4,000 strong, with guns, at no great distance. On the 16th, General Whish moved the Bengal brigade of Markham towards the ford between Ramnuggur and Wuzeerabad, and a bridge of boats was thrown across the Chenab at Huree-ke-puttun, 5 miles from Ramnuggur.

By the happy disposition of the forces,—the Commander-in-Chief on the right flank of the Sikh army Colonel Byrne at Wuzeerabad, Brigadier Markham at the ford, General Whish at Ramnuggur, and Brigadier-General Dundas with the Bombay division within three marches of that place,—the Sikh army, which might have reached the Ravee by the 17th, were placed in a perilous position.

The Commander-in-Chief now recommenced the offensive, marching from Suparee on the 16th towards Goojerat, keeping in close communication with General Whish, on the left bank of the Chenab. He reached Saddoolapore (where Shere Singh had been defeated by General Thackwell), and thence marched on the following day to Koonja (or Koojla), in a direction almost parallel with the Chenab, his camp being now about 6 miles from the Sikh position. Arrangements were here made for reducing the quantity of baggage and the number of camp-followers, the result of which was the saving of carriage to the enormous amount of between 7,000 and 8,000 camels. On the same day, a demonstration of crossing the Chenab, at the Saodra ghat, a little above Wuzeerabad, was made by 6,000 Sikhs, with 6 guns, but the movement of a strong detachment of our troops at that place, by Colonel Byrne, prevented the operation, if seriously intended, and the Sikhs retired upon their main body at Goojerat.

On the 18th the Commander-in-Chief, who had been joined by General Whish, marched to engage the enemy, who is represented to have occupied a very indifferent position, which he was intrenching, a nullah running in his front. His force was estimated at 30,000. Brigadier Markham crossed the Chenab that day, and could join at a moment; and Brigadier-General Dundas had arrived at Ramnuggur the same day. Our force was estimated at 18,000 men, with 70 pieces of artillery.

For the transactions of the two days between the 19th February and the 21st, when the battle was fought, we must await further advices.

The Delhi Gazette closes its narrative with the remark:—
"The more we think on the subject, the more satisfied are we that, to the rapid march of General Whish, and to his having ordered a force on to Wuzeerabad, is the Rechna Doab indebted for immunity from an inroad that would have cost us many lakhs."

Major Lawrence had obtained unlimited leave from Shere Singh's camp on parole. He reached Lord Gough's army on the 17th February, and Lahore on the 19th, from whence he was about proceeding to join Lord Dalhousie at Ferozepore. He brought a message from Shere Singh to the effect that all the prisoners would be returned to us immediately. A letter, which appears in the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, states:

"Major Lawrence reports that the Sikhs are confident of giving us a good beating at Goojerat. Shere Singh paraded the whole of his troops before Major Lawrence, observing to his prisoner,—'These are the troops with which I intend to defeat the army of the Engrese Surkar.' Lawrence's reply was characteristic:—'If you had 200,000 such as these, Sirdar, you could not do it.'"

As a measure of prudence, Brigadier-General Wheeler had been directed to move his force from Deenanuggur, across the Rechna Doab, in the direction of Wuzeerabad. He would, however, of course, be too late for the battle, as the distance is between eighty and ninety miles.

On the arrival of the news at Lahore, that the insurgent army had outflanked Lord Gough, recrossed the Chenab, and was supposed to be in full march upon Lahore, preparations were made by Brigadier Godby to meet any emergency, batteries were erected, and the troops kept upon the alert.

The following is a copy of a proclamation put forth by Sir H. Lawrence:—

"Proclamation for the information of all men who are with the Sikh Forces, and those who are in rebellion. "Feb. 8, 1849.

"On the 18th of November, 1848, the Hon. Sir F. Currie, Bart., published a proclamation, and I re-publish the same, for the information of all men, by order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India, who now proclaims—That any person who is now with the Sikh forces in arms against the British army has the option offered to him of being safe and protected, except Sultan Mahomed Khan Barrukzaee, regarding whom no stipulation is herein made. Firstly. It is announced that the lives of all those who come over at once will be spared. The lives of those who come over will not be endangered on account of their rebellion. Secondly. All soldiers with the Sikh forces who lay down their arms will be permitted to return to their homes unmolested, and remain there without any apprehension of harm. The sirdars, who are jageerdars, will not be deprived of their comforts; they will receive a sufficiency to supply all their wants.

"Let it be well understood, that to entitle those who desire it to without delay.

" H. LAWRENCE."

General Whish's force, on their way from Mooltan, were stopped for a little, receiving submission from Narain Singh, who occupied the fort of Chunout, with a garrison of 2,000 men, who gave themselves up as prisoners. He had here been shut up for some weeks by Shaikh Emaum-ood-deen, despatched at the time of his withdrawal from Mooltan to watch his movements.

It is stated that Moolraj is to be imprisoned at Govindgurh. The dewan's family remain at Mooltan, where they were residing, under the protection of a sepoy guard, in a house outside the town, belonging to an Affghan merchant, named Ameer Khan. Amongst the papers found upon the dewan were some letters written by a man named Shaikh Alee Hussain, formerly an officer of the Ameers of Scinde, and afterwards in the employ of the British, under whom he served during the siege of Mooltan. These letters having proved the treachery of Alee Hussain, who it seems had been in the habit of corresponding regularly with Moolraj, and sending him plenty of news, he was thrown into prison and his property confiscated. A letter from Dost Mahomed Khan, of very recent date, is said to be amongst the number, encouraging the dewan to resist, assuring him that help was at hand.

No final arrangement had been made as to the ransom of the town of Mooltan, and it was said to be utterly impossible for the mahajuns and other inhabitants to raise the amount demanded by the British authorities. The townspeople, however, had been peremptorily called on to pay, and the kardars of the districts in the Mofussil had been requested to compel any of the inhabitants who might be in the country to return to the city.

The investigation into the circumstances attending the murder of Messrs. Anderson and Agnew was actively proceeding with, and the Hindoos who treated the bodies of the deceased gentlemen with indignity had been discovered.

India generally was tranquil, if we except a "fray" re-

NOTIFICATION.

Foreign Department, Camp, Ferozepore, February 23.— The Governor-General has the gratification of notifying to the President in Council, and notifying for public information, that he has this day received a despatch from Major Mackeson, C.B., agent to the Governor-General, with the Commander-in-Chief, conveying the intelligence that the forces under his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, on the 21st inst., attacked and routed the Sikh army in the neighbourhood of Goojerat. The enemy was beaten at every point, and retreated in disorder, leaving in the hands of the British troops, by whom he was pursued, a great portion of his artillery, his ammunition, and the whole of his standing camp. The official despatches of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief will be published as soon as they are received.

The Governor-General directs that a salute of 21 guns shall be fired at every principal station of the army on the receipt of this notification.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS IN THE PUNJAB.

THE JETCH DOAB.

The Bombay papers acknowledge that their reports from the camps are so conflicting, that they can place no reliance upon them, and that they adopt the following narrative from the Delhi Gazette, which is compiled apparently from accurate sources: We left the Commander-in-Chief and his army labouring under the impression on the 11th of February, that the Sikhs, disheartened by the approach of the Mooltan force, the scarcity of money, and want of provisions, were seriously thinking of sending in Major Lawrence with fresh and less objectionable pro-Arrangements had been made to send off the sick and wounded, and the arrival of Gen. Whish was looked for with the utmost impatience and many cheerful anticipations, as, immediately after his junction with the force under Lord Gough, the Sikhs were to be attacked, should the proposed attempt at further negotiation, on their part, be unsuccessful. The Sikhs had very materially altered their position after the 2nd February, concentrating their forces at and about Russool, and carrying their lines along the low hills running north of Chillianwallah, and parallel, or nearly so, with the Jelum. In this range, which averages a height, near Russool, of about 200 feet, and further up the river of about 300, there is a pass, at about six miles, no great distance from Chillianwallah, leading to Pooran and Khwar, and affording a practicable passage for the high-road from Ramnuggur to the town of Jelum, on the right bank of the river, and ultimately to Rotas and Attok. Through this pass the Sikhs managed to obtain their supplies from the country towards the north-east of their position, as far as Goojerat, and even Seealkote; and there is much reason for believing that the convoy, for the protection of which they manœuvred so abiy during the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of February, as to induce Lord Gough to believe he was about to be attacked, came from Goojerat, where our own commissariat officer was busy purchasing stores for our army, and passed on to Russool through this pass. So confident was the Commander-in-Chief, nevertheless, of the satisfactory state of affairs, that " plans " were already drawn out which contemplated the attack, on the junction of the Mooltan force, of the pass in question, in front by Gen. Whish, while the main body of the army were to operate on Russool; at the same time that the intended despatch of the sick to Ramnuggur indicated a belief that the country, in the direction of their progress at least, was not likely to be occupied by the enemy. exact number of wounded who actually started on the 12th was 24 officers and 630 men, European and native.) We omitted to mention, in the proper place and at the time, that an escort, consisting of one squadron from every mounted corps, with some guns, left the camp on the night of the 9th instant for Hailah, to meet a large convoy from Ramnuggur with ten days' supplies, and returned, all right, on the next day. Matters were in this position when, on the morning of the 11th of February, information was brought in (probably sent in, according to the fashion of the Mooltan hurkarus) that the enemy were certainly bent on attacking the British force during that day. The departure of the sick was consequently delayed, and the army prepared accordingly; the three signal guns, from the heavy battery on the mound in front of the camp, were fired, and the British line turned out in battle array, the Sikhs being at the same time drawn up within sight of our camp in two strong columns, one threatening the rear of Lord Gough. They remained in that position between two and three hours, when they withdrew. The disappearance of many of the tents of the enemy from Russool was noticed soon after they had withdrawn from their threatening position, and by the next morning they had been so entirely removed that a reconnoitring party, consisting of irregular cavalry, was sent forward, under Major-Gen. Gilbert, to ascertain what could be the cause of this new and unexpected movement, especially as a large body of troops, which had taken up a position to the north-eastern opening into the plains of the pass to Khwar, had not moved from the post of Kooree, which they had previously occupied. The party moved forward uninterruptedly till they reached Russool, which they were not a little surprised to find totally abandoned by the enemy. So entirely was the place evacuated that the general had an opportunity of leisurely examining the locality, which was found so strong by nature, aided by intrenchments of a very Russool was looked upon as a great advantage gained, especially as news (most likely brought in by those same pliable intelligencers already hinted at, on whom it is clear no reliance can be placed) came in that the Sikhs were in full retreat towards Jelum, with the determined intention of crossing the or the news spread like lightning all over the camp. On the morning of the 13th Brigadier Cheape arrived in camp with a portion (Master's) of the 11th irregular cavalry (two squadrons had been left in the rear with Brigadier Hervey's column), Robarts's detachment of the 14th irregulars (Skinner's), of which had preceded Major Gen. Whish from Chunout by forced marches, and rather astonished some of the quidnuncs by the rapidity of their movements. On the same day the sick were sent off to Ramnuggur under a strong escort, the impression that the Sikhs had retreated probably inducing a belief that there was even less chance than before of their being interrupted in their progress. On the same day, also, the Commander-in-Chief went in person to examine the abandoned position of Russool, wondering, we doubt not, how the enemy came to give up a spot in which was quite evident they would have an opportunity of resisting an attack with the great advantage of position. During the 13th the large body of the enemy at Kooree remained on apparently the same ground as be-fore, our intelligence department continuing in blessed ignorance of their proceedings, and especially of the causes that had led to their evacuation of Russool. The impression that they, or any portion of them, had crossed the Jelun, was, however, completely defaced. It began to be bruited abroad on the morning of the 14th of February, and was very generally known by sunrise, that a large portion of the Sikh army, if not the entire body, had marched from their previous positions, and were actually in possession of the town of Goojerat, where they took a detachment of Nicolson's Affghans, who were in the fort, by surprise (one of them is supposed to have escaped, and to have been the only person who brought in this "pleasant" piece of intelligence), and whence they threat-ened an immediate advance upon Wuzeerabad, investing the place in which the Affghans were posted so completely that there was small chance of their escape. They sent word, however, that, if speedy relief were promised them, they could easily hold out for some days! The whole camp was naturally in a state of intense excitement, and orders were issued, about nine, for the immediate march of the army, which was, however, subsequently deferred till twelve; the utmost haste was still made. and everything was ready for an instant start, when the ardour of the troops was damped by a third order, intimating that the march was to be postponed until next morning. The army abandoned the fortified post of Chilianwallah about four A.M. on the 15th February, reaching the vicinity of Lussooreea, which they had quitted on the 12th of January, after a march, variously estimated at from twelve to seventeen miles, the sun being found somewhat warm for the season. Here it was understood that the main body of the enemy were encamped at a place about seven miles on the Lussooreea side of Goojerat, with a smaller body at that place. Here also orders were issued to Gen-Whish to join head-quarters, but his letters, announcing his own movements, crossed the orders, which could not consequently be obeyed; and the impression in camp was, that nothing would be done on the 18th, although it was considered so highly desirable that the enemy should be brought immediately to action, that a battle seemed all but inevitable for the 19th, when, as far as all human foresight could indicate, success on our part appeared quite certain, that immense preponderance of artillery on our side giving us such a great advantage, that the victory appeared likely to be as easy as it would be bloodless, should anything approaching to generalship be manifested. The number of guns with the Sikhs was known to be 53, ours is 110, including those with the Bombay troops, which may, however, not be in time for the fray. Chuttur Singh had crossed to the left bank of the Jelum, and held the posts the Sikhs had abandoned with his force and 7 guns.

While this was passing in the camp of the Commander-in-Chief at Chillianwallah, Gen. Whish was hastening on without his own cavalry (which had preceded him by forced marches, according to instructions from head-quarters), with Brigadies Markham's brigade, to reach Ramnuggur, and had brought upthe 11th light cavalry to his own column from that of Brigadier-Hervey. On the evening of the 12th an order was issued for the immediate departure of Capt. Anderson's troop of horse artillery, and they arrived at half-past three A.M. on the 13th, having completed a distance of 61 miles in 48 hours! The remainder of the brigade marched in on the same day, and Gen. Whish found himself at the head of a considerable force, consisting of H. M.'s 32nd and 53rd foot, the 13th, 20th, 51st, 53rd, and 72nd N.I., with, however, but one troop of horse artillery, and three regiments of cavalry,—the 11th light, the 12th (Holmes's) irregulars, and the 13th (Quin's) irregulars. The General, we believe, also found orders to remain there until the whole of the Mooltan field force should have closed up; and fortunate it was so, as his position at Ramnuggur, connected with the threatened movement of the Sikha, by Wuzeersbed, on Lahore, must have proved most important. The effect of the movement of the Sikhs on Goojerat was not slow in being felt at Ramnuggur. On the 14th February, information having been received by Gen. Whish that five hundred Sikhs had actually crossed the Chenab at Wuzeerabad (one account from head-quarters' camp says they merely sent a party toexamine the ford), he issued orders for the immediate departure in that direction of two nine-pounder guns (Miles's battery) and of Quin's irregular horse. On the 13th instructions were issued for the immediate departure, in the same direction, of H. M.'s 53rd foot, the 13th N. I., and the 12th irregular cavalry Holmes's), with two horse artillery guns, in charge of Lieut. Alexander, from Anderson's troop; the whole commanded by Lieut.-Col. Byrne. They arrived at Wuzeerabad about four in Lieut.-Col. Byrne. They arrived at Wuzeerabad about four in the afternoon, and there found that the Sikhs had returned to the right bank of the Chenab, if they had ever crossed. It was ascertained, however, that they were actually in force some four thousand strong, with some guns, at no great distance on the opposite side of the river.

Brigadier Hervey reached Ramnuggur on the 16th of February, and Brigadier-Gen. Dundas was expected on the 18th. On the first-named date Gen. Whish issued an order for the march of Brigadier Markham's brigade (H. M.'s 32nd foot, and 51st and 72nd N. I., the 49th being still on her way from Mooltan), and of two squadrons of Master's irregular cavalry (11th), towards the ford, halfway between Ramnuggur and Wuzeerabad. A general action was also looked for with much certainty in Gen. Whish's camp; and we have no hesitation in saying that the speed with which he got over the ground has saved a very large amount of trouble, as, had he not been on the spot at the time he reached Ramnuggur, the whole Sikh army would, in all probability, have been in the Manjha on the 17th, without the possibility of their being stopped by the force under the Commander-in-Chief.

It appears that the march from Chillianwallah was principally delayed in consequence of the difficulty in getting in the camels from the grazing-grounds, to which they had been sent as usual in the morning. Information, of a nature to be relied on, having been received during the 15th, while the head-quarters' camp continued near Luscoreea, that the Sikhs were still nearly in the same position in the vicinity of Goojerat as the day before, it was determined to move in the direction of that place, but to keep in close communication with Gen. Whish's force on the left bank of the Chenab. The march, consequently, commenced about sunrise on the 16th, and concluded about 10, in the vicinity of Sadoolapoor. Late on the afternoon of the same day (the 16th) Major George Lawrence arrived in camp, and after remaining there till the morning of the 17th, proceeded onwards with all expedition towards Lahore, with the supposed intention of ultimately visiting the camp of the Governor-General, near Ferozepore, as the bearer of overtures from the rebel chiefs; that is, according to the common belief in camp; but we have some reason to know that Major Lawrence has been merely allowed to quit the enemy's camp on a week's "leave," on private affairs only, he having steadily refused to be the bearer of any message, the unsuccessful issue of which, he explained to Shere Singh, might be laid at his door by the Sikh soldiery. The army again marched, on the 17th, about six miles further towards Goojerat, almost parallel with the course of the Chenab, and encamped at Koonjah, with the continued prospect of encountering the enemy on the 19th or 20th at furthest. On the new ground the very desirable arrangements of reducing camp equipage and followers were entered into con amore, the Commander-in-Chief setting the laudable example of confining himself to one small tent, and only the servants he absolutely required, as well as by sending in all the records of the several departments, with the officers connected therewith, to Ramnuggur, and therefore calling upon every one, with a safe conscience, to double up two officers in one tent, and to send back all unnecessary baggage, and all servants whose presence was not urgent. The reduction thus effected is said to have been enormous, involving carriage to the amount of between 7,000 and 8,000 camels. The only fault committed was the sending in the records to Ramnuggur without any officer in general charge. It was also arranged that the camp should thenceforth move with rations for five days only, and everything else was made proportionably "snug." It had been ascertained, in the mean while, that the Sikhs had not crossed the Chenab at any point, as had been erroneously reported to Gen. Whish, but that their chief, probably their only, end, in quitting their strong positions at Russool, was to secure more ample means of subsistence than they had hitherto obtained, and also, very likely, to plunder the agricultural population of the very large sums which had been spent among them by our commissariat officers during the previous month; allowing Major Lawrence to come in, with the faint hope of staving off an attack, until they about the provisions. attack until they should have collected a stock of provisions sufficient to last them for some time, when they would once more return to their strongholds on the Jelum. This view of their movements was, however, only taken after Gen. Whish had secured the passage of the river at Wuzeerabad. Had this not been achieved in proper time it is impossible to say what the Sikhs would have done; the probability is they would have taken advantage of the unguarded state of the river, and crossed a large portion if not the whole of their army.

Meanwhile Col. Byrne remained stationary at Wuzeerabad during the 15th of February, with the most explicit orders to risk nothing, should the enemy offer to attack him, but to retire at once on the force in his rear,—viz., that of Brigadier Mark-ham. On the morning of the 16th, Lieut. Alexander was ordered by Col. Byrne, who had received intimation that Shere Singh threatened to cross over a detachment at Sodra Ghat, to proceed to the spot, to inspect the ford, and see if guns could be placed in position there. On his return (the distance is said to be about seven miles), orders were issued for the immediate march of the following troops, as it had been in the mean while ascertained that the enemy had brought a detachment of 6,000 men, with six guns, to the point opposite Sodra,-viz., the two guns of Anderson's troop of horse artillery, the two 9-pounders of Miles's battery, two regiments of irregular cavalry (Quin's and Holmes's), 500 bayonets of H. M.'s 53rd foot, and the 13th N. I. The move had not only the desired effect of preventing the Sikhs from crossing, if they ever had any real intention of doing so, but the one of inducing them to abandon their post, and retire on their main body in the neighbourhood of Goojerat.

Brigadier Markham had on the 16th instant duly reached the place to which he had been ordered, and used such diligence in collecting boats, that he had already 40 in his possession on the 17th, and would thus be enabled to pass over his brigade at the shortest notice, whenever he might be called upon to cross the river, and join the head-quarters force, which was then at no great distance from him.

Gen. Whish's force, consisting of a respectable body after the junction of Brigadier Hervey (we should have mentioned that this officer came on with H.M.'s 10th foot, and the 52nd N.I. leaving the 8th N.I. in the rear to bring on the heavy guns, which only reached Ramnuggur on the 17th), had been directed to join the head-quarters' camp, whither the General went in person to confer with the Commander-in-Chief, with as little delay as possible. Brigadier Hervey, consequently, crossed the river, and effected his junction with the main army on the 17th, and it was understood the heavy guns of his column, with the 8th N.I, would be up on the 18th, or one day, if not two, before it was expected the enemy would be attacked.

We now come to a very disagreeable part of our task, as faithful chroniclers of the doings of the day; and, if we had not the strongest evidence of the entire correctness of our version of the affair, should certainly not allude to it: but, with the facts as they are before us, we cannot even attempt to conceal them. The moment there appeared any probability of an early engagement taking place, orders were despatched to Brigadier-Gen. Dundas, through Gen. Whish, to leave the native portion of his force behind, and hurry on with his artillery and two European regiments, so as to ensure his arriving at Ramnuggur on the 17th. Instead of hastening to obey this order, the officer in question replied to the effect that he saw no necessity for altering the rate of his progress, which was in accordance with the instructions previously sent to him, and that, as a European court-martial was then sitting, of which Major Bloodwas president, he wished to have the proceedings concluded before he moved forward. It may be easily imagined that such a reply was not to the taste of Lord Gough, who sent off such a peremptory despatch that we will venture to say Brigadier-Gen. Dundas did not wait to read it a second time. But in the mean while the object is frustrated, and the mischief done, and great will be the disappointment of the two corps, and of Brigadier-Gen. Dundas himself, should he be too late for the battle, or should his delay have lost a day and enabled the Sikhs to retire on Russool.

A second despatch desired the Brigadier-Gen. to send on the 60th rifles, by a forced march of thirty miles on the 18th, which would leave them fifteen miles to get over to join the headquarters on the 19th. The Commander-in-Chief intimated to Brigadier-Gen. Dundas that he might remain with the nativetroops if he chose!

So far our letters up to the evening of the 23rd.

The dak of the 18th, from camp, furnishes the following additional intelligence:—On the 18th the army marched four miles and a half towards the enemy, from whom they were then distant about six miles, the Sikhs being encamped about one mile and a half from Goojerat, in a very indifferent position, with a nullah running in their front, which promises that the battle is likely to have been a very complete victory. Brig. Markham-crossed the Chenab on the 18th, and was so close to the Commander-in-Chief's camp that he would be able to join at a moment's warning. On that day, therefore, the Chief was within-reach of the Sikh head-quarters, at the head of about 15,000 men; On that day, therefore, the Chief was withinwith somewhere about 70 (24 heavy) pieces of artillery, Cor. Byrne at Wuzeerabad and Sodra with artillery, cavalry, and infantry, Brig. Markham close on the right rear of the Chief, with infantry and artillery, and Gen. Whish ready to move up the Ramnuggur force, including the Europeans of the Bombay division, so that a combined movement, on the 20th, must, to all appearance, have brought the Sikhs to action, and ensured such a victory as will put an end to the campaign, provided the time spent in the movements we have detailed has not enabled the Sikhs to make good their retreat.

We omitted to mention, in the proper place, that Brig.-Gen. Wheeler had been directed to move his force from Deenanuggur, across the Rechna Doab, in the direction of Wuzeerabad. would, however, of course, be too late for the fighting, as the distance is between eighty and ninety miles.

Bombay Telegraph Office, March 4th. — An express, with despatches dated the 25th ult., arrived late last night from the camp of the Governor General, bringing the important intelligence of a battle having been fought on the 21st between the British army under Lord Gough, and the insurgent forces, headed by Shere Singh. The Sikhs, we are informed, were beaten on all sides, with the loss of several, but not the whole, of their guns. Their ammunition, and the whole of their standing camp, were taken by the British. Nothing is said as to the loss sustained on either side; and indeed official details on thishead can hardly as yet have been received. By the last advices, the British were still in pursuit of the foe.

The above brief account (embracing all the news which has as yet come to hand) seems to indicate that the Sikhs have at last received a sound thrashing. As the ammunition and standing camp, however, were taken by Lord Gough, it seems odd that any of the Sikh guns should have been allowed to be carried off from the field. We have been so accustomed to false or imperfect official statements, that until the arrival of details we hardly know whether a complete victory has been won or not.

Mooltan, Feb. 9 .- Here we are all stagnant. A battered mass of ruined fortifications and a deserted city, of which scarcely a house has not been ventilated for ever with a shell, are all that is left to tell of the Mooltan rebellion. Here and there, too, a tomb is rising up over the remains of some brave fellow who will lead on no more. Major Scott, of the Bombay engineers, is making the fort defensible again, by clearing out the exploded ditch, scarping and stockading the breaches, and mounting the guns. Both the native infantry regiments are to be in the fort, and the 1st lancers in the Am Khas garden below it. Moolraj's family are to be removed out of the fort to some retired house in Their privacy has been scrupulou-ly regarded, and the suburbs two of the Moolraj's younger brothers, Sham Singh and Ram Singh, are on guard. Lieut. Lake has gone with Whish. Major Edwardes has assumed civil charge of these provinces, assisted by Lieut. James, from Scinde. Lieut. Young, of the engineers, with a detachment of Edwardes's irregulars and two guns, has gone against one Mokum Chund, a kardar of Moolraj's who is in the strong fort of Hurrund, under the southern Soolee-munnee range, west of Dera Ghazee Khan. Lieut. R. Taylor is encamped still at the fort of Lukkee, in Murwut, which he took the other day single-handed, after a long siege. Along with him are Lieuts. Pollock (assistant resident) and Pearse (Madras artillery), Col. James, and Mr. M'Mahon, also Dr. Cole, all commanding the now scattered fragments of Edwardes's levies and Cortlandt's regiments; altogether about 5,000 men and Il guns. The object of this strong force at the head of the Trans-Indus is to prevent the Affghans whom Dost Mahomed has sent into Bunnoo from occupying the Trans-Indus countries given by Chuttur Singh to the Dost.

Chunout surrendered to Gen. Whish on the morning of the 9th, and Sheik Emam-ood-Deen was placed in occupation of it. The materiel de guerre consisted of two guns of small calibre, 10 zumbooruks, 200 horses, and a large collection of swords and matchlocks. The garrison numbered 2,000, as villanous-looking a horde as could possibly be selected. It was rumoured that great wealth had been collected from the surrounding villages and stored up in the fort by this band of freebooters, but such has not proved to be the case, although a strict search has been made. Some miscellaneous property, grain, and some few mules, alone complete the list of captures; but it has been proposed to levy a considerable fine on the Bunneas, and other moneyed inhabitants, who may have aided or abetted Narrain Singh's forays; this stern task has been intrusted to the vigilant sheik, who will be found exceedingly apt to the work. The former is rather a fine-looking sirdar; he is exceedingly talkative and bombastic, appearing to consider himself a perfect roostum. I expect he will accompany Moolraj to Lahore; it will be somewhat amusing to witness their meeting under present circumstances. Sadik Mahomed alone is wanting to complete the play. The fortifications of Chunout are sorry in the extreme, consisting of a rather high puka wall, flanked with balf a dozen small bastions; the Sheik could make no impression on them with his Lilliputian artillery, so he had recourse to mining; a breach was of course the result, but his troops did not admire storming, and the siege remained in statu quo. The besiegers appear to have suffered equal loss (and that, too, very considerable) by the matchlock firing. This place is surrounded by isolated rocky hills of considerable height, from one of which it is entirely commanded.

Lieut. Graham, horse artillery, has died at Mooltan of the wound he received during the siege.

The ransom for the city has not yet been realised, though our demands had dwindled to twenty lacs; most of the rich merchants had not returned to their houses, and it was even feared that we should have to put up with a paltry fifteen. Daily discoveries were being made in the fort, and the prize prospects were looking up, thanks to Major Wheeler and Capt. Hobson (of the Bombay division), whose experience renders them as fuit at the task.—Delhi Gaz.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

(Supplement to the London Gazette of 6th March.)

Concluded from p. 168.

Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 28, 1848.

Sir,—Having received orders to proceed as near as possible to a high mound, about two miles in front of the camp, and there continue a cannonade for some time from a light field battery as a feint, taking advantage of any opportunity to rush on, and seize the mound, known by the name of "Mundee Awa," I marched at 11 A.M., on the 27th instant, in the following order, Capt. Abercrombie, Bengal engineers, conducting the column.

5 companies of the 60th royal rifles in quarter distance column of companies, strength as per margin,* Major Dennis commanding.

No. 5 light field battery complete in column of divisions, commanded by Capt. Bailey, and attended by a company of sappers and miners under Lieut. Walker.

The 3rd regiment native infantry, Major Hallett commanding, in quarter distance column, while a squadron of lancers, under the personal command of Brigadier Poole, covered both flanks, and kept up a communication with the camp in rear.

Having proceeded about a mile, as nearly as the ground would admit, in the above order, I caused two companies of the 60th rifles to extend and cover the front, and so advanced about a quarter of a mile, when the enemy's round shot beginning to pass through the extended ranks, I directed that a large building, then about 600 yards in front, should be taken possession of by the advanced skirmishers, which was done under a discharge of round shot and shrapnell from the town, fortunately with no other loss than one private of the 60th rifles killed, and one wounded; at the same time the 3rd regiment native infantry was ordered to open out to wheeling distance. The excelent fire of the ridemen, in and about the building, soon subdued that of the enemy's skirmishers, and I then ordered the battery to take ground to itself and open its fire on the mound "Mundee Awa," and the intermediate space about 700 yards, thus carrying into effect the orders I had received to make a feint. Having fired about twenty minutes, the enemy's fire was continued only from some old intrenchments. I then decided on a general advance under cover of skirmishers, both from the 60th royal rifles, and 3rd regiment native infantry, the battery following in the rear, and the cavalry disposing of itself as it best might, under the unfavourable nature of the ground. A general rush forward to the mound, with a cheer, now took place, the two infantry regiments being nearly in the same line. The enemy fled towards the suburbs over and to the left of the mound, which, on being taken, was found evacuated. The greater part of the 60th rifles followed the enemy over the mound party of that regiment. At this time, the 3rd regiment was actively engaged to the left of the mound, pursuing the enemy, which had taken shelter in a mosque, and under hedges and walls. Here they charged the enemy and drove them into the city. I then sent orders for its recall, lest the main object, the possession of "Mundee Awa," should be hazarded.

I also recalled from the suburbs the 60th royal rifles, and directed the light field battery to be brought into position on the mound, which was done as soon as a road could be cut by the sappers and miners. I also detached Lieut. Forbes, of the 1st cavalry (lancers), to camp for reinforcements. In the meantime, observing the approach of part of the Bengal column, on my right, I agreed to the suggestion of Capt. Abercrombie, that the suburbs should be held in front, and on both flanks of the mound, as far as possible.

A re-occupation of the suburbs was made without much resistance by the 60th royal rifles, and part of the 3rd regiment of native infantry, in conjunction with a portion of the Bengal column, consisting of three companies of H. M.'s 32nd regiment, under the command of Major Inglis, and part of the 51st Bengal native infantry, under the command of Major Finnis. About this time a shrapnell shell from the town burst over one of the nine-pounder guns which had commenced to answer the fire from the town, killing Lieut. Younghusband, 9th regiment native infantry, my acting aide-de-camp, and two artillerymen, and wounding severely Lieut. Hill, field engineer to the Bombay column, who had accompanied the attack. The nine-pounder guns soon succeeded in silencing the enemy's howitzer or mortar, and only round shot were subsequently fired at the mound, with little effect, save in one instance, when Capt. Bailey, commanding the artillery, had his arm carried off, and an artilleryman, since dead, was severely wounded. I regret to add, that, previous to this, Major Gordon, of the 60th royal rifles, when in command of a party clearing the suburbs, in front of the mound, fell mortally wounded by a matchlock ball fired from one of the houses, when crossing an open space; no other casualty of the sort occurring, owing to the steadiness and skill of the men in taking advantage of every cover during the advance Having examined the position taken up, I found, on my return, that a reinforcement, consisting of a wing of the 9th regiment native infantry, had arrived from camp. A chain of posts was them established in the suburbs, and a sharp fire was kept up by the enemy during the night, happily without doing any injury. The following officers were directed by Brigadier the Honourable H. Dundas, C.B., to accompany me as my staff, in addition to my personal staff: - Capt. Stiles, major of brigade, and Lieut. Gordon, 60th royal rifles, permitted to act as my aide-de-camp whenever required with the brigade. Capt. Tapp, deputy assistant adjutant-general, Lieut. Pollexfen, deputy assistant quartermaster-general, Lieut. Younghusband, 9th regiment native infantry, who volunteered his services as aide-de-camp on the occasion. The whole of the above were most zealous and efficient in effecting the arrangements required.

In conclusion, I beg to add, that nothing could exceed the gallantry and discipline of the 60th royal rifles, and the alacrity in moving forward of the 3rd regiment N.I. The exertions of the artillerymen on the battery were unremitting. The reinforcement, composed of a wing of the 9th regiment N.I., unde, Major Bellasis, was chiefly employed in guarding the battery and in working parties, during the night, in which their zeal was conspicuous.

Brigadier Poole's arrangements were most judicious, but the nature of the ground did not admit of cavalry being actively employed.

H. Dundas, C. B., in the action of the 27th Dec., 1848.

Killed.—2 European officers, I havildar, II men. Wounded. 8 European officers, 1 native officer, 1 serjeant, 1 havildar, 87 en. Missing.—18 men. Names of officers killed and wounded.—Lieut. Younghusband, 9th N.I., acting aide-de-camp to Brigadier Capon, killed; Capt. Bailey, artillery, wounded (left arm amputated); Major Gordon, wounded; 2nd Lieut. Brooke, same reg., slightly wounded; Lieut. Dyett, and Ensigns Shaw and Napier, 3rd N. I., wounded; Lieut. W. M. Mules, 1st fusiliers, slightly wounded; Lieut. J. Hill, engineer department, severely wounded.

Major-General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Dec. 30, 1848.

I was in hopes yesterday of being able to forward a complete casualty list in reference to our attacks of the 27th instant, and

I have the gratification now of reporting to you, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that, by a shell from one of the mortars of the battery mentioned in my letter of the 28th instant (laid on the occasion by Lieutenant Newall, Bengal artillery), the enemy's principal magazine in the retadel was blown up at 9 A.M., and the grand Musjid so appropriated completely destroyed, with many houses and other buildings in its vicinity. The sight was awfully grand, and precisely similar to that at the siege of Hatrass on the 1st March, 1817; I hope the consequence may be the same, in which case the enemy would abandon the fort to night; otherwise I contemplate assaulting the city to-morrow.

Major-General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Mooltan, December 31, 1848.

I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that the fire from the citadel was quite subdued yesterday. This morning a small gun has been occasionally used, but the enemy appear to have gone into the city, where a few of them keep up a smart matchlock fire on our breaching batteries. We have no accounts that can be depended upon, as the gates of the city and citadel are closed, and neither ingress nor egress permitted. On looking just now at the progress of the breaches, more battering appeared necessary.

Not having yet been able to get the return of casualties on 27th instant, from the Bombay division, I inclose that of the Bengal troops employed on the occasion, and am glad to state that many cases of the wounded men are very slight.

Major General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, January 2, 1849.

The army I have had under my command, since the junction of the Bombay reinforcements, has effected in a week the re-duction of the fortified city of Mooltan, and made the interior of the citadel a wreck. The former was taken by assault this afternoon, after the most obstinate resistance; and at half past three r.m. I had the satisfaction of seeing the British standard wave on its walls, having been planted there by the 1st fusiliers that formed the advance of the left column. In making this report to you, for the information of the Commander-inChief, I beg to say that I shall take the earliest opportunity of entering into particulars, and in the meantime would offer his Lordship my best congratulations on the success Divine Providence has been pleased to grant to our arms, and, as I have at present every reason to believe, with comparatively but little

(Then follow field-force orders.)

Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas to the Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army.

January 3, 1849.

I have the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-chief, that the town of Mooltan was taken by storm yesterday afternoon; the Bombay attacking column, commanded by Brigadier Stalker, C. B., consisting of the 1st European regiment (fusiliers), the 4th N.I. (rifles), and the 19th N.I., being the first to enter the breach at the Khornee Booj.

The Bengal column, which was intended to enter the breach at the Delhi gate, failed, in consequence of it having been found to be totally impracticable, there being in fact no breach, and access to the town quite impossible, owing to an outwork, and a deep ditch, which was entire. This column then took ground to the left, and entered the breach which the Bombay column had carried, and fortunately no repulse took place in consequence of the two breaches not being carried simultaneously.

I am happy to inform his Excellency that the conduct of the 2nd brigade was highly distinguished, and I am glad to say that no officers were killed, though several have been severely wounded, among them Capts. Tapp and Leith, the latter having had his left arm amputated. Lieut. Gray, of the fusiliers, also lost his right arm. Lieuts. Dansey and Law, and Lieut. Warden, of the 4th rifles, were also wounded. Several accidents also occurred from explosions, full particulars of which shall be duly communicated as soon as possible after the receipt of the official reports and returns.

A strong cannonade is now being kept up against the northeast face of the fort, the interior of which was nearly destroyed by the explosion of the principal magazine on the morning of the 30th ultimo.

Major-General Whish to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp, Mooltan, Jan. 22, 1849.

I have the satisfaction of reporting to you, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that in accordance with the expectation I expressed in my letter of yesterday, Dewan Moolraj came into my camp this morning, in charge of Major Becher, assistant quartermaster-general; the garrison at the same time, between 3,000 and 4,000, surrendering, and laying down their arms to the columns under Brigadiers Hervey and Capon that had been in orders for the assault of the citadel. This peaceful and successful termination to our seige operations, after the laborious and gallant exertions of the troops since the 27th ultimo, will, I have no doubt, be very gratifying to his Lordship and to the Government, and I am grateful to Divine Providence for having permitted in this way the accomplishment of such an important result.

On the 1st instant, with my letter* (No. 860), I had the satisfaction of forwarding Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas's report of the conduct of the troops of his division engaged in the attack on the suburbs on the 27th ultimo, of the left column of which he took personal command, particularising many officers in command of corps or departments, and on the staff, whose services had been valuable also on the 7th instant. With my letter* (No. 876) I transmitted similar reports of the proceedings of the two columns under Brigadiers Stalker and Markham that had taken the city by assault on the 2nd instant, and which will, I trust, meet with the favourable consideration of his Lordship; but not having hitherto availed myself of any occasion to notice in just terms of commendation various officers of the Bengal division, who have been with me the last six months, I beg permission to do so now.

To Brigadier Cheape, C.B., chief engineer of the army of the Punjab, and Major Napier, chief engineer of the Bengal division; to Capts. Abercrombie, Western, and Siddons; to Lieut. Garforth, brigade-major of engineers, dangerously wounded on the 2nd instant; and to all the officers of the engineer department, and of the corps of sappers and pioneers, I am much indebted for their zealous, scientific, and persevering exertions; as also to Major Scott, chief-engineer of the Bombay division, and to the officers The practice of the artillery was the theme of admiraunder him. tion with all. My thanks are particularly due to Majors Garbett and Leeson, respectively commanding the artillery of the Bengal and Bombay divisions; and to the officers under them, Brev.-Maj. Blood, and Capts. Turnbull, Daniell, Anderson, Master, and Mackenzie. Lieut. Mill, brig.-maj. of the artillery of the Bengal division since July, has been particularly brought to my notice by Maj. Garbett for his useful services, and as contributing essentially to the advance of our operations. I must particularly commend those of Capt. Hicks, Bombay artillery, and Lieut. P. Christie, Bengal artillery, commissaries of ord-nance, who were unremitting in their attention to their important duties. The services of Brigadiers Hervey and Markham, com-manding infantry brigades, and of Brigadier Salter, commanding the cavalry, as also of their brigade-majors, Capts. Wiggins and Balfour, and Lieut. Warner, have been very valuable; and it will be in the recollection of his Lordship, that Brigadier Markham had the good fortune, on the 7th November last, and on the 2nd instant, to command columns of attack that were eminently successful.

In my letter* of the 7th instant, No. 876, I noticed the gal-lant proposition of Lieut.-Col. Franks, C.B., commanding H.M.'s 10th regiment, for a party being given him to escalade the citadel on the 2nd instant; and I am much indebted to that officer on other accounts.

It is also proper for me to notice in terms of commendation the other officers commanding corps in the Bengal division, and under canvas the last six months, namely,-Lieut.-Col. Brooke, H.M.'s 32nd regiment; Major Farquharson, commanding 8th N. I.; Major Lloyd, commanding 49th regiment; Major Finnis, commanding 51st N.I.; Capt. Jamieson, commanding 52nd N.I.; Capt. Lloyd, commanding 72nd N.I. (relieved on 30th November by Lieut. Col. Nash, C.B., who was severely wounded in the attack of the 27th ultimo); Capt. Inglis, commanding 11th regiment light cavalry; Major Wheler, commanding 7th irregular cavalry; Capt. Master, commanding the 11th irregular cavalry; and Lieut. Robarts, commanding squadron of the 14th irregular cavalry, who relieved from that charge dron of the 14th irregular cavalry, who relieved from that charge, on 30th November, Lieut. Plowden, of the 50th N.I.

Lieut.-Col. Drummond, C.B., deputy quartermaster-general, and Major Becher, assistant quartermaster-general, have uniformly given me the most efficient aid, and with a willingness that much enhanced it; and the assistant adjutant-general, Brevet-Captain Whish, has performed his laborious duties with a promptness, intelligence, and zeal, that much lessened mine.

Captain Lloyd, in charge of the commissariat department (assisted by Captains Cooper and Turner, Lieutenants Tombs, Robertson, and Willes), has uniformly made such excellent arrangements, that the troops have never been inconvenienced for want of supplies; and that department has in every respect been conducted most satisfactorily.

The superintending surgeon, Dempster, has uniformly and successfully applied his talents and assiduity to the promotion of the health and comfort of our sick and wounded, and been ably supported by the medical officers of every corps and department.

The officers of my personal staff, Capt. Clark Kennedy, H.M.'s 18th regiment, and Lieut. Need, H.M.'s 10th light dragoons, aides-de-camp, have been so unremitting in their exertions to promote the service, that I cannot convey a correct idea of the grateful feeling their conduct has impressed on me. They both merit my warmest commendations and thanks.

I have written this despatch in much haste, and fear I have omitted the names of some to whom I feel much indebted, in which case I shall not fail to repair the omission.

It is very satisfactory to me to add in conclusion that I have always experienced from Brigadier the Hon. H. Dundas, C.B., commanding the Bombay division, and from the brigadiers and officers in command under him, the most willing assistance.

The services of Commander Powell, of the Indian navy, with the steamers under his orders, have been of much value to the objects of the expedition; and a detail of seamen from the vessels have afforded material relief at the batteries on several occasions.

I have had the greatest satisfaction in directing a royal salute to be fired from the citadel at noon in honour of his Lordship's wictory over the Sikhs on the 13th instant; and I shall order another to be fired at sun-set, for the happy termination of military operations in this quarter.

The Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary of the Government of India.

Simla, October 4, 1818.

I have the honour, by direction of the Commander-in Chief, to transmit, for the information of the Governor-General of India in Council, a copy of a despatch, of the 25th ultimo, from Brigadier C. Campbell, C.B., commanding the Punjab division, forwarding a letter from Brevet-Major S. Fisher, commanding a detachment of troops, in which he reports having dispersed, near Noorpoor, a band of marauders, under a leader of the name of Ram Sing.

A casualty return of the detachment is inclosed; and I am directed to state that Major Fisher has been informed that his Excellency considers the conduct of the troops employed to have been highly creditable.

Brevet-Major S. Fisher, commanding 15th Irregular Cavalry, to Brevet-Major H. Palmer, Major of Brigade, Jullundur.

Camp near Noorpoor, Sept. 19, 1848. I have the honour to report, for the information of Brigadier Wheeler, C. B., the dispersion, with slaughter, of Ram Sing and his followers from the position they had occupied.

The hill in the possession of the rebel Ram Sing was attacked this morning by the troops as per margin,* in four separate parties. The villages were burnt; Ram Sing and his followers were driven from their different positions and dispersed with slaughter. The tents and drums were destroyed; and the character of Ram Sing as a successful soldier is, I trust, totally annihilated in the eyes of the predatory soldiery who have hitherto been his support. I am happy to add that this has been effected with but the slight loss of one sepoy killed and nine wounded. The casualty list is duly inclosed.

The loss of the enemy it is impossible to ascertain with any certainty. Some 75 dead bodies have been discovered; but the denseness of the jungle-which also aided Ram Sing's escaperendered it impossible to give any accurate state of the actual loss sustained by the enemy; it must though be great.

Nothing could be more deserving of praise than the conduct of both officers and men of all arms on this occasion.

Camp, Kalka, Oct. 22, 1849. (Extract.)

I have the honour, by direction of the Commander-in-Chief, to transmit to you, for the information of the Governor-General of India, a copy of a despatch of the 15th inst. from Brig. H. M. Wheeler, C.B., commanding in the Jullundur Doab, recounting the manner in which he effected the reduction of the fort of Rungur Nuggul.

The Commander-in-Chief has had much satisfaction in causing to be conveyed to Brig. Wheeler, and to the troops employed on this occasion, an expression of his warmest approval of their conduct; and his Excellency has moreover had pleasure in congratulating the brigadier in having effected the reduction of this strong place without any expenditure of life, which is entirely to be ascribed, in the opinion of Lord Gough, to the soldierlike and judicious arrangements that were made.

Brigadier Wheeler to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp at Rungur Nuggul, Oct. 15, 1848. (Extract.)

My last was from the right bank of the Beas on the 12th inst. I have now the honour to state, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that I marched on the 13th to Mehta, 131 miles, and encamped about three miles to the south of the fort-On the 14th moved the camp to a good position, just clear of the enemy's fire, to the south-east of the fort; and immediately after the whole had arrived, proceeded with the artillery to drive the enemy from the village, having previously sent the cavalry round to the northern and western faces, to take up distant positions, and watch any attempt that might be made at escape

No sooner did the party in the village observe these movements than it hastily abandoned it, and took to the fort, well pressed by a party of the guide corps under Lieut. W.S. Hodson.

I now turned my attention to the fort, and opened a fire of shell from the two 24-pound howitzers, and one 12, with an occasional round shot from a battery of 9's. The practice was beautiful.

The occupation of the village enabled me to line the wall and two high pucka houses with Lieut. Hodson's rifles, and a company of 3rd regiment N. I., whose fire effectually kept down that of the garrison. I drew off at 10 A.M., leaving two companies of the 3rd N. I. in the village, aided by a party of the corps of guides.

Finding that the western face of the town commanded the gate wall, and at 4 г.м. opened a most destructive fire on the gate and its defences from three 9's, one being placed in the gateway of the village, the 24-pound and 12-pound howitzers being in Captain Johnstone, with 120 of the 29th N.I. Captain Rind, with 250 of the 71st N.I. Major Hodgson, with 300 of the 1st Sikh Infantry. Captain Wallace, with 130 2nd Sikh hill rangers. The cavairy, 130, were employed in the plain under Captain Davidson, to prevent the escape of or cut up the enemy.

battery more to the southward, throwing in line shells, the practice, as in the morning, most effective. I drew off at sunset, leaving two companies of H. M.'s 61st regiment, and a company of 3rd N. I., in the village.

I have now the pleasure to state that a little after midnight the fort was evacuated, and the gateway taken possession of by a party of the corps of guides, and held by them until I went there this morning early.

The fort, though small, is of great strength, having a double fausse-braie, with a wide and deep ditch, the whole in excellent repair, for it had lately been carefully strengthened.

I enclose a casualty-roll, and am proud to say that it could scarcely have been less; indeed, it is wonderfully small, for the enemy was both bold and vigilant. The one death was caused by one of our own 9 pounder shot passing clear over the fort, and striking a sowar in the 2nd irreg. cav., Capt. Jackson, in his zeal, having taken up too close a position.

What the loss of the enemy may have been I have no means of judging, but they were burning their killed during the whole day.

Nothing could be finer than the practice of the artillery; and

Cant. Sissmore, com-Major Swinley, commanding that arm, Capt. Sissmore, commanding four guns of No. 15 Light Field Battery, and Capt. Burnett, commanding No. 19 Light Field Battery, and all the officers and men, greatly distinguished themselves.

The troops, European and native, were eager for a storm, but I was as determined to avoid one, except as a last resort, and it was fortunate, as it would not, if taken at all by assault, which I doubt, have been done without a great sacrifice of life.

I have had the most cordial and valuable assistance from Major H. Palmer, major of brigade, Lieut. J. S. Paton, dep. assist. qu.-mast. gen., and Capt. Davidson, 16th irreg. cav., who volunteered his services as my aide-de camp; and I cannot allow the mention of Lieut. Paton's name without acknowledging the obligations which I owe to him for the extraordinary efficiency to which he has brought the intelligence department, as well for its extent as its wonderful correctness, more especially when the very limited means at his disposal are considered.

Lieut. W. S. Hodson, with his detachment of the corps of guides, has done most excellent service, and by his daring boldness, and that of his men, gained the admiration of all.

Camp, before Ramnuggur, Nov. 27, 1848.

It affords me the greatest gratification to forward, for your Lordship's information, a copy of a despatch of the 23rd inst., addressed to the Adjutant-Gen. of the Army by Brig.-Gen. H. M. Wheeler, C.B., commanding the Punjaub division, reporting the reduction of Kullalwalla.

I have directed the Adj.-Gen. to convey to Brig.-Gen. Wheeler my hearty congratulations and thanks for the important services he, and the brave troops under his command, have rendered on this occasion.

Camp. Kullalwalla, Nov. 23, 1848.

In continuation of my letter* of yesterday's date, I have much satisfaction in reporting, for the information of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, that the strong fort of Kullalwalla is in my possession.

A close reconnoisance having been made after the action of the morning by Capt. Oldfield, of the engineers, accompanied by Lieut. Col. A. Wilson, of the artillery, I decided on the positions for three batteries. One of eight 9-pounders was in a garden, the mud wall of which furnished excellent cover, and through which embrasures were cut. It was about 160 yards from the gate, on which it fired. One of two 24 pounders and one 12-pounder howitzer, about 450 yards from the fort; and one of five 6-pounders, at nearly 300 yards.

The guns were moved into position well covered with cavalry and infantry, the latter lining the garden wall, and keeping down the enemy's fire, and occupying every vantage ground, at a little before 4 r.m., and poured shot and shell with admirable effect on the gateway and into the works. I drew off to my camp at sunset, throwing a strong detachment of the 3rd regt. N. I. into the village, under Capt. Wallace, and occupying a position which watched and commanded the gateway.

The village had been held by a large hody of the enemy, from which they were dislodged by the detachment of the corps of guides in good style, killing several. I had closely invested the whole, both fort and village, with my cavalry, and the investment continued through the night. The only drawbacks were the darkness of the night and the close proximity to the fort of large tracts of sugar-cane cultivation.

About I A.M. to-day, the enemy attempted to abandon the fort, and succeeded, after losing several men by the fire of the detachment under Capt. Wallace, losing many more by the cavalry through which they had to pass; and I believe I am under the number in stating that at least 300 of the enemy have been killed. Of the wounded, excepting a very few who have been taken to our hospitals, I can give no idea.

I am proud to say that this success has been achieved with the loss of but one man killed and five wounded.

Capt. Oldfield, of the engineers, has been most active, intelligent, and useful. I have already mentioned Major Swinley; he and Capts. Sissmore and Burnett, each commanding batteries, and all of that arm, gave me great satisfaction, as indeed have the officers and men of every branch.

I also brought to the favourable notice of Lord Gough the officers acting as my stuff in the operations of the morning, and have great pleasure in stating that their services were as zealous and effective in those of the evening.

General Lord Gough, G. C. B., Commander-in-Chief, to the Governor-General of India.

Ramnuggur, Nov. 23, 1848.

Deeming it necessary to drive the rebel force at this side the river across, and to capture any guns they might have had on the left bank, I directed Brig.-Gen. Campbell, with an infantry brigade of the troops under his command, accompanied by the cavalry division, and three troops of horse artillery under Brig.-Gen. Cureton, to proceed, during the night of the 21st, from Saharun, four miles in front of my camp at Nonwulla, to effect this object. I joined the brigadier at three in the morning to witness the operation.

I hope to be able to enclose Brig-Gen. Campbell's report, with a return of the killed and wounded, which I regret to say is much greater than I could have anticipated, in a great measure from the officers leading being unacquainted with the difficult nature of the ground in the vicinity of the river, and of which no native information ever gives you a just knowledge, and in some measure to the impetuosity of the artillery and cavalry, who, notwithstanding these difficulties, charged to the bank of the river, thereby exposing themselves to the fire of about twenty-eight guns. I deeply regret to say a gun was left behind, but spiked, having actually, in the impetuosity of the advance, plunged down a bank close under the fire of the enemy's guns. It was reported to me it would occasion a fearful loss of life to bring it away, which alone could be effected by manual labour, and scarping the banks under the fire of even the matchlockmen on the opposite bank; I could not, therefore, consent to such a sacrifice. Though blameable as it may appear to have taken the guns into such close proximity to the enemy's guns in position, which could not, from the river intervening, be captured, it is impossible not to admire the daring gallantry exhibited by the troops, both of cavalry and artillery.

I witnessed with intense anxiety, but equally intense admiration, a charge made by Lieut.-Col. Havelock, at the head of the 14th Lt. Drags., who, I fear, misconceived the orders he received: from the officer commanding the cavalry division, or from the inequalities of the ground, and the fearful dust occasioned by such a rapid movement, mistook the body he was instructed to charge, and moved upon and overwhelmed another much closer to the river, which exposed him to a cross-fire from the enemy's guns. I never witnessed so brilliant a charge, but I regret tosay the loss was considerable, were it only in that of Brig -Gen. Cureton, than whom a better or a braver soldier never fell in his country's service. The brave leader of the 14th, Lieut .- Col. Havelock, is missing; he charged into a gole of the enemy, and has not since been seen, regretted by every soldier who witnessed. his noble daring.

The enemy suffered severely; numbers were precipitated into the river, and drowned, and a standard was captured. The Goorchurras were more daring than I have beforeseen them, but the brilliant charges both of the 3rd and 14th light dragoons will have taught them a lesson they will not readily forget. This was a cavalry affair alone; the infantry never was, nor could have been, brought into play without an unnecessary exposure of life; but the cavalry and artillery, engaged under Brigadier-General Campbell, whose judicious arrangements were most creditable to him, nobly supported the well-earned fame of the Indian army, and is but a prelude to, I have no doubt, the honourable fulfilment of what their country expects of them. Brigadier White conducted the movements of the force, of which the 3rd formed a part, and as usual acted with gallantry and judgment; and Lieut.-Col. Grant commanded the artillery arm with much credit. I regret to say that gallant old soldier, Lieut.-Col. Alexander, has lost an arm, but I am thankful that all are doing well.

Lord Gough to the Governor-General.

Camp before Ramnuggur, Nov. 27, 1818. In continuation of my letter to your Lordship of the 23rd instant, I now do myself the honour to forward the report of Brigadier-General C. Campbell, C.B., commanding the troops on the morning of the 22nd instant, of the operations of that day

I also beg to inclose a copy of a General Order, which I have caused to be issued to the army of the Punjab on the occasion. Brigadier-General C. Campbell, C.B., Commanding 4th Division, to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Camp near Ramnuggur, Nov. 24, 1848. I have the honour to report to you, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that, in obedience to his Lordship's instructions, the troops in advance under my orders moved, at 3 o'clock A.M., on the morning of the 22nd instant, from their encampment near to Saharung, with a view to attack a considerable portion of the enemy's regular troops, who were, with several guns, stated to be on this bank of the Chenab, in the vicinity of Rainnuggur. On reaching the high ground to the right of the town, it was ascertained that these troops, with their guns, had crossed to the encampment of the enemy on the opposite bank, where his whole force was in position; at the same time, however, several small parties of the enemy were observed to be retiring from the town of Ramnuggur in the direction of the ford in front of the enemy's encampment, when Capt. Warner and Lieut.-Col. Lane's troops of horse artillery were ordered by Brigadier Cureton, in command of that arm and of the cavalry of the army, to pursue these parties, and to open fire on them while crossing at the ford. These troops of horse artillery, in their eagerness to overtake the enemy, pushed forward through the deep and heavy sand which extends for a long distance on this side to the very margin of the river, and through which the guns could only be moved with great difficulty. The flicted considerable loss on the enemy while crossing. Their fire in-

In withdrawing from this position, which was effected under the fire of the whole of the enemy's artillery, amounting to 28 guns, posted on the high ground which immediately overhangs the river on the opposite bank, I regret to say that one gun and two ammunition-waggons, belonging to Col. Lane's troop, got so imbedded in the heavy sand behind a deep bank, that they could not be recovered.

The enemy, upon observing the difficulty in which this gun was placed, immediately crossed with great confidence the whole of his cavalry, in numbers between three and four thousand. They clung to the banks of the river, and kept constantly under cover of the fire of their artillery on the opposite bank.

This cavalry was charged on separate occasions by H. M.'s 3rd and 14th light dragoons, and 5th and 8th regiments of light His Lordship the Commander in Chief was an eyewitness of the brilliant conduct of these several corps, and of the intrepid manner they were led by their officers. The enemy were overthrown upon every occasion, who fled for shelter to the river side, to be under the cover and protection of their artillery; but I lament to say, that these several defeats of the enemy's cavalry were not effected without loss.

Brigadier-General Cureton, commanding the cavalry of the army, was killed while leading a squadron of H. M.'s 14th light dragoons to the support of the 5th light cavalry. In this officer, who had the honour of enjoying his Lordship's entire confidence and warmest regard, the service has lost one of its most distinguished officers, and one who was beloved by the whole army.

I regret also to have to report that Lieut.-Col. Havelock, commanding H.M.'s 14th light dragoous, is reported to be missing. He was last seen charging the enemy at the head of his noble regiment, and has not since been heard of.

I am sorry to have further to report that Lieut. - Col. Alexander, commanding the 5th regiment light cavalry, has been severely wounded, and lost his arm. Some other officers and men have also been wounded, whose names are mentioned in the enclosed return of casualties.

(Return of killed, wounded, and missing, of the advance force of the army of the Punjab, under the command of Brigadier-General C. Campbell, C.B., in the action with the enemy on the 22nd of November, 1818:—14 killed; 59 wounded; 12 missing.

Names of officers killed, wounded, and missing: - Ensign G. N. Hardinge, extra aide-de-camp, severely wounded; Brigadier-General C. R. Cureton, C. B., commanding Cav. Div., killed; Brevet Lieut.-Col. Lord Gough to the Governor-General.

Camp, Ramnuggur, Dec. 10, 1848. In continuation of my letter of the 5th inst., I have now the honour to inclose to your Lordship a copy of Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell's despatch, dated the 6th idem, but only received last night, detailing the operations of the force under his command, after it had been detached from my head-quarters.

I can only repeat the warm approval I have already expressed of the conduct of the major-general and of every officer and man under his command, and I beg your Lordship's favourable consideration of the services of those named by Sir Joseph Thackwell

Major-Gen. Sir Joseph Thackwell, K.C.B., commanding the advanced post of the army, to the Adjutant-General of the Camp, Heyleh, Dec. 6, 1848. I have the honour to report, for the information of the Con mander in-Chief, that, agreeably to his Excellency's orders, I left the camp at Ramnuggur, with the troops named in the margin,* at about half past 3 o'clock on the morning of the 1st Dec. 1848, instead of at 1 o'clock, as I had ordered, some of the troops having lost their way among the intricacies of the rear of the encampment, and proceeded to the vicinity of the ford on the Chenab, at Runnee-Khan ke-Puttun, distant thirteen miles from Ramnuggur, which, owing to the broken ground, narrow roads where any existed, for the first four miles, I did not reach before II o'clock. The enemy had infantry at this ford, which report afterwards magnified to 4,000 men; but the villagers said it was much deeper than the one at Allee Shere-ke Chuck, a mile higher up the river. I am much indebted to Lieut. Paton, dep. assist. qu. mast. gen., for his anxious exertions in examining this ford, and from his report I came to the conclusion that this ford of Allee Shere-ke Chuck could not have artillery on the left bank of the river to cover the passage of the troops, from the insecure bottom of the first ford; neither could the pontoon train be of much use, for the same reason, and the deep sands which lay between the fords. The pontoon train might have been laid over the main stream, under cover of a battery near the enemy's infantry; but beyond the river the sands seemed wet and in cure, and a branch of the river beyond them was said to be deep. with a muddy bottom. Under all these disadvantages, I came to the decision that it was more advisable to try the passage of the river near Wuzeerabad (where Capt. Nicholson, assistant to the Resident at Lahore, informed me that at the ferry were seventeen boats, and a ford not more than three feet ten inches deep, with a good bottom), than to run the risk of a severe loss by passing the river near the enemy. This survey of the ford occupied three hours, and at 2 o'clock I put the column in movement to the ford and ferry at Wuzeerabad, which was in the possession of Lieut. Nicholson's Pathans, where the leading infantry arrived about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, having made a march of about twenty-five miles. The 6th brigade of infantry and some of the guns were passed over the Chenab immediately, and I am indebted to Brig. Gen. Campbell, Lieut, Col. Grant, H. A., and Capt. Smith, of the engineers, for their great exertions in forwarding this object. Brig. Eckford I hoped would have crossed the river by the three fords that evening, but as it became too dark and hazy for such an operation, he halted for the night on the dry sands near the last branch of the river. Major Tait, 3rd irregular cavalry, was enabled to pass over three of his rissalahs, in doing which I am sorry to say three sowars and one horse were drowned. On the morrow, the infantry, cavalry, and all the troops were soon over the river, by ferry and ford, and all the baggage and commissariat animals passed the same by 12 o'clock without any further loss.

At 2 P.M., after the troops had dined, I marched in order of battle, three brigade columns of companies at half distance left in front at deploying interval. The first brigade of cavalry in the same order on the right, with strong flanking parties and rear guard, and the 3rd irregular cavalry on the left, with orders to patrol to the river and clear the right bank, aided by infantry, if necessary. In this order I arrived at Doorawul at dusk, about twelve miles from the ferry, and halted for the night. On Sunday, Dec. 3, at daylight, the troops proceeded in the same order towards the Sikh position, and I intended to have reconnoitered and commenced an attack upon it by 11 o'clock; hearing, how-ever, when within about four miles of it, or less, that reinforcements were expected to pass over the Chenab, at the ford near Ghurree-ke-Puttun, it became necessary to secure that post, and which had been found without an enemy an hour before, but to which it now seemed that a body of about 600 of the enemy were seen approaching, and I detached a wing of the 56th N. I. and two rissalahs of the 3rd irregular cavalry, under Major Tuit, who secured the post, and frustrated the attempt of the enemy. This caused so much delay, that enough of daylight would not be left for the advance and attack on the left and rear of the enemy's position. About 2 r.m. some of the enemy's guns opened on a patrol of the 5th light cavalry, and he was seen advancing in large bodies of cavalry and infantry, and the picquets which occupied three villages, with large plantations of sugar-cane, being too much in advance to be supported, fell back without any loss, and the enemy occupied these villages, with cavalry on the right, guns, and bodies of infantry, and the main body of their cavalry, with horse artillery, were on their left. When the enemy's guns opened, I ordered Brig. Gen. Campbell to deploy the infantry into line, in front of the village of Sadoolapoor; Brig. Eckford and part of Brig. Hoggan's brigade being extended, in order not to be outstanked. It was not until the enemy came well within range of our guns that I caused them to open their fire, which they then did with great effect. The enemy tried to turn both our flanks, which, having foreseen, I had caused Capt. Warner to move his troop of artillery to the left of the infantry, and had sent the 5th light cavalry to the left to support these guns, and to act in conjunction with the two rissalahs of the 3rd irregular cavalry, under Capt. Biddulph, who were posted on open ground, and these soon drove the enemy back. tempt to turn our right was met by extending the 8th light cavalry and H. M.'s 3rd light dragoons, supported by Major Christie's troop of artillery. As the cavalry of the right advanced, the enemy's sowars gave way, and they fell back on their infantry, having lost some men by the skirmishers of the 3rd light dragoons. After a cannonade of about two hours, the fire of the enemy slackened, and I sent Lieut. Paton to desire the cavalry on the right to charge, and take the enemy's guns, if possible, intending to support them by moving the brigades in echelon from the right at intervals, according to circumstances; but as no opportunity offered for the cavalry to charge, and so little of daylight remained, I deemed it safer to remain in my position than attempt to drive back an enemy so strongly posted on their right and centre, with the prospect of having to attack their intrenched position afterwards. From this position the Sikhs began to retire at about 12 o'clock at night, as was afterwards ascertained, and as was conjectured by the barking of dogs in their rear. I have every reason to believe that Shere Sing attacked with twenty guns, and nearly the whole of the sikh army were employed against my position, which was by no means what I could have wished it; but the fire of our artillery was so effective, that he did not dare to bring his masses to the front; and my brave, steady, and ardent infantry, whom I had caused to lie down to avoid the heavy fire, had no chance of firing a shot, except a few companies on the left of the line. The enemy's loss has been severe; ours, comparatively, very nall. I regret not being able to capture the enemy's guns, but with the small force of cavalry,-two regiments on the right only,-it would have been a matter of difficulty for tired cavalry to overtake horse artillery, fresh and well mounted. In these operations, the conduct of all has merited my warmest praise; and the patient endurance of the artillery, cavalry, European infantry, and sepoys, under privations of no ordinary nature, has been most praiseworthy.

To Brigadier-Gen. Campbell I am much indebted for his able assistance during these movements; and to Lieut. Col. Grant, commanding the artillery, Major Christie, Captains Huish, Warner, Austin, and Kinleside, and the officers and men under their command, I cannot bestow too much praise for their skill and gallantry in overcoming the fire of a numerous artillery, some of which were of heavy calibre. I am also greatly indebted to Capt. Smith, of the engineers, for his exertions in passing over guns at the Wuzeerabad ferry, and for his assistance in conveying my orders on various occasions. And my thanks are due to Lieutenants Yule and Crommelin, of the same corps; and to Lieut. Bacon, of the sappers; to Lieut. Paton, deputy-assistant quartermaster-general, my best thanks are due for his exertions and assistance in the advance of the troops and during the action; and to Capt. Nicholson, assistant to the Resident at Lahore, I beg to offer my best thanks for his endeavours to procure intelligence of the enemy's movements, for his endeavours to procure supplies for the troops, and for his able assistance on all occasions. Capt. Pratt, my deputy-assistant adjutant general; Lieut Tucker, deputy-assistant quartermastergeneral; Lieutenant Thackwell, aide-de-camp; and Volunteer Mr. John Angelo, my extra aide-de-camp, have been most zealous in performing their respective duties, and have rendered me every assistance; and I feel assured that if the cavalry and infantry had been brought into close action, I should have had the great satisfaction of thanking brigadiers, commanding officers of corps, and the officers and men, for their gallantry and noble bearing in action, as I now do for their steadiness and good conduct. To Major Mainwaring, Captains Gerrard, Simpson, Faddy, and James, I am much indebted for their exertions in their respective departments.

I beg further to state that, on the morning of the 4th, I put the troops in motion to pursue the enemy, who had retreated during the preceding night and encamped about eleven miles from the Chenab, on the road to Jullalpoor, the 9th lancers having been pushed to the front, but without seeing anything of the enemy, who had retreated by the Jelum, Jullalpoor, and Pind Dadun Khan roads; and on the following day I arrived at this place, and sent two regiments of cavalry on the road to Dingee, one of them, the 14th light dragoons; and two regiments of cavalry, and a troop of horse artillery, on the road to Jullalpoor: the latter party observed two bodies of the enemy of about 800 and 400 men, each imagined to be a strong rear guard, about eight miles from this, and behind a thick jungle which reaches to the river; and the former went to Dingee, which place the enemy had left, and the villagers said had gone over the Jelum. Both parties returned to this camp, without, I am sorry to say, having overtaken any of the enemy's troops or guns. I beg leave to enclose a return of the killed and wounded.

Killed, 21. Wounded, 51. Missing, 1. Names of officers wounded.—Lieut. E. J. Watson, horse artillery; Capt. E. G. Austin, 10th light field-battery, severely; Lieut. Garsten, 36th N.I., severely; Lieut. A. Gibbings, 3rd irregular cavalry.

Lord Gough to the Governor-General.

(Extract.)

In further continuation of my letter of the loth instant, I feel it my duty to forward the inclosed letter from Major-General Sir Joseph Thackwell.

Sir J. Thackwell to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Heyleh, Dec. 14, 1848.

In continuation of my despatch of the 6th instant, relative to the action of Sadoolapoor on the 3rd, I have the honour to state my regret that Brigadier-General Campbell had not brought to my notice the services of the officers of the staff of the 3rd division of infantry, by which omission the names of Major Ponsonby, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. Haythorne, aide-decamp to the brigadier-general, and Lieut. Garden, deputy-assistant quartermaster-general, have been omitted. I now beg leave to state that the brigadier-general considers that these officers have rendered him every assistance in their respective situations.

BENGAL.

FINANCES OF BENGAL.

The Calcutta Gazette has given, on official authority, the comparative register of the revenues and charges of the Bengal Government for the years 1845-46, 1846-17, and 1847-49. The general result gives rise to unpleasant reflections, inasmuch as the lower provinces of this presidency furnish one-half the revenue of the Indian empire, and there is no such elasticity in the resources of the three other divisions as would compensate for any deficiency in its finances. The comparison stands thus:

	Ī	Receipts, Rs.	Disbursements. Rs.	Surplus. Rs.
1846-47	•••	10,24,82,020	3,60,91,255	6,63,91,765
1847 48		9.43.36.982	3.77.86.286	5.65.50.696

The falling off in the past year is equal to one crore of rupees. We find that the difference between the net profit of opium in the past and preceding year is about ninety-eight lakhs of rupees. The deficiency may, therefore, be attributed to this department, in which an experiment has been made during the last official year to ascertain the result of increasing the supply. It does not appear to have met with the success anticipated, and there can be little doubt that, if Government finds that the augmentation of the drug creates a deficiency of revenue, the annual sup-ply will be again reduced within its former limits.

In salt, on the contrary, there has been an increase, arising partly from an increase of revenue in 1847-48 over 1845-48 of about six lakhs of rupees, but chiefly from a diminution of expense to the extent of no less than fourteen lakhs. The clear surplus in the former year was 104 lakhs of rupees, and of the latter, 124, notwithstanding the reduction of price, which it was supposed would put twelve lakhs a year in jeopardy. This revenue is independent of that derived from imported salt, and which is carried to the credit of customs.

In 1845-46 ..... 78,95,139 rupees. 1846-47 ..... 71,15,890 " 1847-48 ..... 69,64,758

And the present official year will probably exhibit a still further decrease, owing to the great stagnation of trade.

The abkaree, or excise on spirituous liquors, is becoming gradually more productive, and if the large establishments now distributed over the country, and the great precautions against the illicit manufacture of liquor, reduce the consumption, we shall have reason to rejoice in the increase of the public revenue.

The land revenue, in the permanently settled districts, remains without alteration. The revenue is about 370 laklis a year; the expense of collecting is about 10 per cent.

Unfortunately, however, the fortunes of the Post-office have been so inauspicious as to damp our expectations of any reform that will cost money. We believe that the Post-office in Cal-cutta was the only office in India in which the receipts exceeded the expenditure. We have lost that pre-eminence.

The accounts of 1845-46 exhibit 12,956 rupees of surplus.

So there is an end to Post-office reformation until Government shall see fit to bring the charge of conveying the public mails to the credit of the department, when there will be a sufficient surplus to render the establishment efficient.

On the whole, this view of our finances is not cheering. is easier to brighten our military, than our financial prospects. To restore our finances to a sound state,—to reduce our expenditure without weakening the empire,—to increase our income without increasing the public burdens and the public discontent,—cannot be accomplished, even by the ablest financier, except in a series of years. To the deficiency of a million sterling we now notice, there is to be added the balance due from the Lahore durbar, and the boundless expenses of the present war, which, under existing auspices, can scarcely be completed under four crores of rupees. — Friend of India, Feb. 1.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAIL (express from Bombay) with news from England to Jan. 8, reached Calcutta Feb. 15.

PRISE MONEY.—It is reported that a crore of rupees has been found in the fort of Mooltan, and that a subaltern's share will amount to Rs. 5,000.

Ma. Dunbar, the Commissioner of Dacca, will, it is said, be appointed to succeed Mr. Hawkins as temporary Judge of the Sudder.

BARKS.—The shareholders of the Delhi Bank declared a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, at their meeting on Saturday. An endeavour was made, but unsuccessfully, though supported by the president of the direction, to reduce the rate to 9 per cent. A very curious disclosure was made on the occasion, on which we shall have some remarks to offer when the report of the proceedings is before us.—The Agra Bank have, in a report remarkable for its brevity, declared a dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.—The N. W. Bank rate is 8 per cent.— Delhi Gazette, Feb. 14.

THE CASE OF P. J. SARKIES, merchant and agent, was brought before Sir L. Peel, with an application for discharge, on the 10th February. It was opposed by Mr. Morton on behalf of Messrs. Hyde, Leonards and Co., on the ground of an alleged misappropriation of certain letters of credit transmitted by the London firm to the insolvent, to be used in various modes which were not specifically stated. It was also opposed on the further ground, that the insolvent had received an Union Bank post bill of the value of Rs. 10,000, with specific instructions to realize the amount for another firm, but had deposited it with Mr. Moses, to the credit of his own account. The Chief Justice declared that the first reason was void, as Messrs. Hyde Leonards and Co., were legally consenting parties; but with regard to the second, the new law must be brought into operation, and he should therefore remand the case till Mr. Sarkies had been six months in custody.—Friend of India.

THE RANGE OF SHORAPORE. - We are informed that the investigation into the conduct of the Rance of Shorapore has terminated in her complete acquittal, and in the exposure of an infaznous conspiracy for her ruin, by means of forged papers and forged evidence supplied by a native in the employment of the Superintendent, who, being aware that his master was dissatished with the Ranee's conduct, made sure of success. now a prisoner at Linsigoor. The Resident directed this lady and the other persons involved in the same charge to be tried by the Superintendent who had made the accusation against her. The publicity given to the affair apparently attracted the attention of Government, as Gen. Fraser's order for the Rance's trial was cancelled. To try her and the Bedur chiefs charged as cebels, a commission was appointed, consisting of Capt. Johnston, Capt. Warre, and Dr. Primrose, which sat at Linsigoor. It is to be supposed that the Government, as an act of common justice, will order the restitution of the Rance, who was peremptorily expelled from her country by order of the Resident. The Indian Government would best consult its own dignity by avoiding quarrels with ladies. It is very true that they cannot be permitted to claim impunity by reason of the privilege of their sex, if they will mix themselves up in political intrigues; but in this instance the charges, if we are correctly informed, originally related to private conduct, and nothing more. The Superintendent, having charge of the young Rajah, a boy of thirteen, was naturally anxious to withdraw him from the influence of bad example, and he ought most certainly to have been supported in any measures necessary for that purpose. But advantage has evidently been taken of his dissatisfaction with the Ranee to get up these charges against her, and this adds another to the numerous instances already recorded, of the facility with which the gravest accusations are concocted against those who are known to be out of favour with the authorities. — Englishman, Jan. 25.

THE GOORKAH ARMY, we are told by a military man, who saw it, made an impression upon him by no means favourable to their discipline; he thinks they could not have stood two hours in the plains against a single division of our troops. With regard to their artillery, he observes that their gunnery is wretched, their powder "very bad, worse than common bazar powder, and their shot hammered, some three-cornered, some oval, some between a sphere and a dodecagon."—Englishman.

LORD GOUGH has not been without defenders in the Indian journals. "A British officer, who has served under him," has expostulated with the Delhi Gazette for asserting that, "by his headstrong rashness" in the late action, "he is fast losing the confidence of the European and native troops." He observes that "the loss in killed and wounded has been confined to one division, or rather to one brigade, of the army; for casualties thus localized, commanders-in-chief are not generally held responsible. In attacking an enemy in an entrenched position, the fury of the battle rages in general at one particular point. The brunt of the battle must be borne by the troops led on against it. For casualties occasioned through the disgraceful flight of a brigade of cavalry, a commander-in-chief cannot be held responsible." He pronounces the assertion, as to loss of confidence, "a gratuitous libel upon the officers and men of the army of the Punjab, based upon the reports of white-livered scare-crows in the Commander-in-Chief's camp. "In Lord Gough, on the field of battle," he continues, "the troops under his command recognize a commander confident in his own experienced judgment; prompt in forming his plans, and still more prompt in having those plans carried into execution. The Mojussilite has likewise put forth a palliation, not a defence, of his Lordship, wherein it is observed: "The great mistake which Lord Gough has made—and he has not been singular—is the under-rating the Sikhs as an enemy. In the common acceptation of the word, they are not 'natives.' They are a disciplined and a brave foe. Of their bravery let us instance the fact, that they met the charge of H. M.'s 24th, and seizing hold of the foremost muskets with their left hands, cut at the men who carried them. With a foe like that to contend with, it is impossible for any general to oust them from a position without losing very heavily. Much more might have been gained with much less loss; but it is wrong to lay all the blame on the Commander-in-Chief."

A Report has been in circulation for the last few days, that certain influential native gentlemen are about to open a bank in Calcutta, under the name of the Bank of Burdwan. This title indicates the quarter from which it is expected to receive support, and we hear that the capital to be subscribed is one crore of rupees. The distinguishing characteristic of the proposed bank is that no European is to be a director, or to hold any office within its walls, the parties believing that the Union Bank has effectually destroyed the credit of banking institutions so managed, and expecting to be largely trusted by their own countrymen. A well-managed bank would be useful just now, but we doubt the advantage either of admission or exclusion by classes. In the Union Bank the mischief was done by Bengalees as much as by Scotchmen.—Englishman, Feb. 20.

A CORRESPONDENT residing at Serampore has sent us the following account of a phenomenon not often seen in India: - Last Wednesday (Feb. 7th), on severing a branch of a tree, apparently of the tamarind species, I found a toad in the centre of the wood, entirely excluded from the light and air. The appearance of the animal was rather extraordinary. The body seemed full of air, and the skin soft and puffy, and of a light yellowish colour, with the exception of the extremities of the feet, which were hard and dark. The creature, when exposed to the air, seemed rather uncomfortable, and drew in its head just like a turtle when alarmed. It was thrown into a tank, when the water around to the space of about a foot on either side became perfectly white like milk. It jumped out of the water immediately, apparently not liking the coldness. I did not have the opportunity of observing it farther, which I regret, as the animal got concealed in the long grass on the side of the tank, and was thus lost. The general supposition as to the mode by which animals get enclosed within trees is, their taking shelter in a cavity of the tree when very young, and the growth of the tree filling up the cavity, and thus imprisoning the animal. But this supposition, if true in the present case, makes the circumstance now related the more extraordinary. The tree is an old one, upwards of fifty feet high, and having a trunk more than three feet in diameter; and the height from the ground at which the toad was found was about twelve feet. We must suppose the toad to have got into the tree when within a foot from the ground, -how many years old then must the animal be? - Indian Times.

THE LATE J. GORDON, ESQ.—We deeply regret to hear of the death of J. Gordon, Esq., official assignee, who fell a victim to cholera yesterday. It is but a short time since Mr. Gordon arrived in Calcutta from Sydney; and during his incumbency at the Supreme Court his affability and energetic attention to business were making him highly popular.—Hurkaru, Feb. 22.

John Cochrane, Esq.—We heard yesterday, with pleasure, that Mr. Cochrane had been appointed to the vacant post of official assignee. It would be hard to name any one more suitable, either by reason of long experience or high character, and it is surprising how the Court happened on a former occasion to overlook the claims of the seniors of the profession, and to prefer a total stranger, whose local inexperience alone might have been considered a sufficient objection to his appointment. In Mr. Cochrane, creditors will acquire an able guardian of their interests, while the unfortunate will always be sure to find him a kind and compassionate public officer.—Englishman, Feb. 23.

THE AGRA BANK.—We have examined with some care the statement of the accounts of the Agra Bank which has just been published, and can safely congratulate the friends of that highly enterprising and prosperous establishment on the results of the operations of the past year. When almost every house and copartnery has had to bewail heavy losses and diminished income, and reduced prospects, the Agra Bank continues to thrive amidst misfortunes on every side of it. The net divisible surplus at the disposal of the shareholders amounts to no less than Rs. 346,599, or nearly 35,000l. sterling—affording a dividend on the paid-up capital for each share equivalent to above ten per cent. Over and above this, there remains at the credit of the reserve-fund, Rs. 34,172, which it is considered wise to retain for the present undivided, to meet the risk of certain contingent losses which may or may not occur. -Bombay Times.

MR. McManon.—We are informed that the Mr. MacMahon, who distinguished himself as a volunteer with Major Edwardes' force at Mooltan, and was so active in repelling the last sortie of the Dewan at the Shooshmahal, was an officer in the Bengal marine service, and served for some time on board the Enterprize in 1845-46. Quitting that profession, he entered the Indigo line, but on the breaking out of hostilities he pushed on to the frontier, and made his way to Mooltan. - Calcutta Star, MESSES. LYALL, MATHESON, AND Co.-A first dividend at the rate of ten per cent. on all approved claims upon this estate will be paid by Mr. W. Simond, the inspector in Calcutta, after the 20th Feb.

DACCA BANK .- A dividend at the rate of nine per cent. per annum is payable at the Dacca Bank, on account of the halfyear ending 31st Dec. last.

FUND FOR THE WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF MEN WHO FELL IN THE BATTLE OF THE JHELCH. - The Rev. Mr. Whiting has gained the praise of the camp for his zeal and energy in originating a fund, and collecting donations for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the brave men who fell in the recent battle on the Jhelum. It was at first a simple sacramental collection, with an invitation from the pulpit to those who could not attend service to send their subscriptions, however small. This fund gradually increased by regimental contributions, till it exceeded Rs. 4,000 and admitted of instant pecuniary relief being sent to most of the sufferers in afflic ion. To this sum, so credita-ble to the contributors, the Governor-General has, unsolicited, added Rs. 500 - and in the note, from Mr. Courtenay, the private secretary, enclosing it, was a draft for Rs. 200, on his own account. Some tire has clapsed since the public was called upon to re-lieve the distressed, and we have no scruples in suggesting that a fund on a large scale be formed for the purpose of placing above want and poverty those who suffer sufficient pain in the loss of those upon whom they depended for support. We do not adask the many to contribute according to their means, and to unite in furthering so desirable an object. In every station throughout India a few hundred rupees could be collected, without inconveniencing in any way the respective donors. These sums conjoined, would tend materially to lessen the miseries of many a wretched woman who has been widowed, and many a child who has been left fatherless and unprotected.

Although the residents of the various Presidencies are removed from the scene of action, we feel assured that the distresses of their unfortunate fellow-creatures will not be distant from their minds, when they reflect on the condition of the persons on whose behalf we now appeal. Those who have been ready to subscribe to statues and testimonials to the great and the rich will hardly be backward in assisting the humble and the poor: and we sincerely hope that in Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, the influential will not fail to respond to this call, which we trust will meet with an echo from every member of the Indian press. If we may be permitted to make a suggestion, we should say that the proposed fund should extend its benefits to all who now stand in need of assistance, and may hereafter stand in need thereof, in consequence of bereavement during the present campaign.—Mofassilite, Feb. 16.

UNION BANK.—Last night's Gazette promulgated the Act "to confirm an agreement between certain shareholders and creditors of the Union Bank of Calcutta," which has at length passed Council as Act No. III. of 1849. It differs but little, and chiefly in respect to a few verbal alterations, from the draft put forth in October last. The only material difference that we have detected is that the Act, as it now appears, provides for the schedule of assessment being deposited in the Supreme Court, and not, as the draft contemplated, in the Insolvent Court. As we have mentioned before, the effect of the Act is merely to remove any doubts that might have existed as to the legal force of the agreement betwixt the creditors and the shareholders of the Bank, and to limit the operation of that agreement to those who are parties thereto. It is now four months since it was first read in Council, and why it should have been kept on the shelf so long we cannot imagine. - Hurkaru, February 15.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. SULLIVAN HARINGTON STEER, 56TH BEN. N.I.

Head-Quarters, Camp Chilianwalla, Jan. 25, 1849. general court-martial assembled in camp, at Chilianwalla, Jan.

22, 1849, Capt. S.H. Steer, 56th N.L., was arraigned on the following charge:

For having, on Jan. 13, 1849, in camp at Dingee, been intoxicated, and thereby rendered himself unfit to march with his regiment from Dingee on that morning, for which he was sub-quently placed in arrest, and thus, by his own misconduct, be-came incapable of accompanying his regiment into action on the afternoon of that day.

Finding. - Guilty.
Sentence. - To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed, Gough, General, C.-in-C. (Signed)

Head-quarters, Camp, Chilianwalla, Jan. 24, 1849.

The sentence of the court will take effect from the date on which this order may be published to the 56th regiment N.I.

INVALIDS. - A portion of H. M.'s invalids embarked on board the Tudor, under the command of Capt. Seymour, H. M.'s 34th regt. on the 20th February. A second portion embarked on board the Gloriana, under the command of Lieut. T. Horan, H. M.'s 84th regt., and the invalids of H.M.'s civil service, on board the Vernon, under the command of Capt. A. L. Tweedie, 36th N.I.

on the 23rd February. Тик бти Rect. N.I. left Bellary on the 13th instant, en route to Kulladghee, via Dharwar.

51st N.I.-We understand that Major Ussher, of the 51st regt. N.I., is about to be invalided; this will promote the following officers in his room :- Capt. J. M. Madden, to major; Lieut. W. Johnstone, to captain; Ensign W. D, Maclagan, to lieutenant. - Athenæum.

THE 14TH AND 15TH N. I., stationed at Bangalore, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to move and relieve the Bombay troops at Dharwar.

DEPARTURE OF THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA. - A salute of seventeen guns from the saluting battery announced the departure of the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, who embarked from the Custom House yesterday morning for Calcutta, accompanied by the archdeacon, the master attendant, Rev. A. R. Symonds, and the domestic chaplain, on board the Honourable Company's brig Tavoy. The vessel got under weigh im-mediately on his lordship's arrival. Several of the clergy and gentry were present on the beach to witness his lordship's de-parture.—Athenæum, Feb. 24.

WE LEARN with much regret that the lady of Brigadier Steel, C.B., has been cut off by cholera, on the march toward his seat of command in the ceded districts. This melancholy event took place at Paulsamoodrum upon the morning of the 15th inst. -

Spectator, Feb. 21.

THE PARTITION OF THE PUNJAB.

Amongst the numberless speculations which have of late occupied the public mind, no question-after that as to annexation perhaps—has been more frequently mooted than that as to whether Dost Mahomed should be allowed to obtain Peshawur or The conduct of the ameer and his Affghans has done much to perplex the question, which otherwise would probably have been of comparatively easy solution. They do not as yet seem to have committed themselves by any act of hostility against us, but equally have they avoided aiding or befriending us in any way at the time aid from them, however slight, might have been of the highest importance to us. We do not want their assistance in the field; there they might have been but of little use to us; but their services would, if not in this way, have in another been of the utmost avail. They might have enabled us to retain both Peshawur and Attock, and annoyed and distracted the enemy at a fearful rate in the rear. There is no difficulty now in fathoming their purposes: they are obviously waiting to join with the successful in opposing the losing side, and are ready to seize and plunder either party whenever opportunity presents. That they will at once fall on the scattered or retiring Sikhs should a reverse befal them, is all but certain; and Heaven pity them then, for pity from the Affghans they will find none. But for service such as this we shall owe them nothing. Were they to attempt to help themselves to Peshawur, of course we must drive them out of it: we may give it to them should we think it for the advantage of ourselves or our ally - we cannot suffer it to be taken from us by force. Suppose our hands unfettered, we believe that in sound policy there is little doubt of the expediency of re-annexing the old Affghan provinces conquered by Runjeet Singh, to the Doorannee empire, rather than retaining them as portion of the Punjab dominions. lion of Lahore, like the English frontier-extensionists, too often omitted to count the cost when he went to war-to calculate the value of a conquest before he began to conquer. Having once seized on Peshawur, he found himself bound-as we conceive ourselves in the case of Scinde-to keep it as a point of honour, when he knew how much better he would have been without it: and we are assured alike by Burnes and Masson,authorities in this agreed, though on so many other points conflicting,-had we made the slightest show of interference, or done anything to enable him "to save his Purdah," he would only have been too glad to fall back within the frontier of the Indus. There is no axiom more unquestionable than that in political geography which holds that the best frontier a great country can oppose to a turbulent one, next to the shores of the great ocean itself, is a river or a desert—that the worst one is that where hot and sickly plains, occupied by a people under a quiet and regular government, approach the base of mountains belonging to enemies or barbarians. The Welsh, and more especially the Scottish highlands, afford on a small scale abundant illustrations of this, where the opposing races occupying the hill and dale were under the same sovereignity, and bound over by the laws to keep the peace towards each other; and the badness of the self-evidently abominable frontier we selected when we took possession of Scinde is sufficiently shown by the necessity of maintaining it by a force of 12,000 men five years after its annexation, - one fourth of this being sufficient for our former frontier, where it is still in reality required. To push our outposts up to the Khyber Pass-to expose ourselves to annoyance from the tribes, and attacks from the garrison, of Ali Musjid-would be as indifferent policy as could well magined were we only left at liberty to choose. It is from sudden and unlooked-for attacks made by assailants who cannot be pursued or punished within their fortifications, and who maintain themselves in the holds of their impregnable hills and glens, that danger only arises. Give us a frontier such as the unfordable Indus supplies, with a rich and valuable country such as Peshawur beyond, and nothing more need be desired. We could in this case not only bid defiance to assaults from the Affghans-we required merely to keep the boats on our own side to prevent them crossing to annoy us.

We could punish them any day by a force from Attock, and take the only fertile lowland province of the Doorannee empire. Peshawur would in this view be a pledge at all times within our reach for the good conduct of the Affghans: it might be inconvenient to force the Khyber or the Bolan Pass-a day's march would place Peshawur at our disposal. On the same ground, the Punjaub would be well rid of all the provinces beyond the It is true we have some awkward inconsistencies in this case to face. Our refusal to exhort Runjeet Singh to restore Peshawur, or to permit Dost Mahomed to attempt to recover it, gave us the Afighan war. But we must gulp these things as we best can: if the dismemberment of the Punjaub should be complained of, we may point to the principle which prevents rights founded on acts of spoliation and bad faith from ever coming to maturity. A robber can never plead possession, however long, as a ground of justification for the detention of plunder; the only mischief is, that we should have been compromised by sanctioning the conduct of Runjeet Singh. We have, however, an European case exactly in point. Had Napoleon Buonaparte been content with the frontier of the Rhine, and willing to remain at peace after his return from Moscow, no one would have meddled with the spoils he had brought to Paris from every capital in Europe; when he pushed matters further than patience could endure, every one of them had to be restored. We have used the term our, meaning the British Government, to save circumlocution, though our remarks of course refer to the course we might be expected to recommend the Sikhs to pursue, and assist them in pursuing .- Bombay Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MAILS.—The Mozuffur, with the London Mail of Jan-24, reached Bombay Feb. 24, at noon. The Ajdaha, with the London Mail of Feb. 7, reached Aden Feb. 27, and departed the same day for Bombay.

INDIAN LADIES.—An attempt has been made at Bombay to "bring out" the native ladies. On the 8th February, the manager of the Arena of Arts appropriated that establishment for the exclusive entertainment of the ladies of the native community. To prove the degree of strictness and impartiality shown by the manager in fulfilling the promise made in the play-bills, not a member of the rougher sex was to be seen in the house; every one of the Company even, whose services could be dispensed with, was so for that evening, and none but the band, with the chief performers, were to be observed in the house. Several European ladies are said to have tried hard to gain admittance; but the promise made was rigidly adhered to. The house was but indifferently filled, and the audience, though highly respectable, extremely scant. There were present but a few of the families of the more influential members of the Parsee community, and these, with about a dozen families of the Jewish persuasion, with one or two other exceptions, were all that took advan-tage of the kindness of the manager. There was no falling off on this account, however, on the part of the performers, and the performances were gone through with the same spirit which has characterised them since the Arena opened. The effect of these on the audience is said to have been astounding and highly pleasing; and many on leaving expressed the high gratification which they had experienced.

Major Lewis Brown, 5th L.I., better known as the Hero of Kahun, is, we believe, to be appointed Resident in Cutch, in succession to Lieut.-Col. H. G. Roberts, 23rd N.L.I., who returns to Europe on sick leave by the steamer of the 3rd March next.

WOUNDED AT MOOLTAN.—Accounts from Bombay state that nearly all the wounded at Mooltan are doing well.

DR. DAUBENEY.—We have received from Mr. Daubeney a pamphlet, giving an account of the circumstances which led to his acquaintance with the late Mrs. Frere, and of the grounds on which the rumours which led to his trial for the murder of the unhappy lady were founded. The whole matter is of such a nature that it is impossible to place details before the general reader, and Dr. Daubeney is in the unhappy position of being the sole witness in his own favour, much of his testimony being incapable of confirmation. Under such circumstances, however, so long as there is no proof against him, and no evidence of his having been guilty of prevarication, we feel bound to accept his own version of his own case; and this we must at once allow affords us a ready solution to most of the mysterious circumstances out of which suspicion arose. The first point on which an impression very generally entertained is got rid of, is that at the time at which Dr. Daubeney became acquainted with Mrs. Frere.-he never saw her, or spoke with her, it seems, till within six months of her demise,—the belief hitherto having been that they were intimate friends, or rather that he was a favoured lover, before Mrs. Frere's marriage altogether. The state of the lady's health, again, was such as to account for her medical adviser, himself then on sick leave at the hills, and at liberty to reside where, and occupy himself as, he pleased — residing in her house. The dead infant found in the box is as much a mystery as ever; but that Dr. Daubeney could have had no connection with this portion of the matter, becomes obvious from dates. With so plain a narrative before us, it does seem surprising how Dr. Daubeney could ever have suffered suspicions such as those which for so long a period surrounded him, to come into or to remain in existence. There surrounded him, to come into or to remain in existence. is nothing now revealed by which any one is compromised or needs to be pained: there is much that is unmeet for the public eye, but this merely because of its being the account of a medical man of the health of a patient suffering from a malady which cannot be described without offending the general reader. He owed it to his character, but more especially to that of the miserable victim of a constrained connection, to have lost not one moment's time in providing the means of putting down those misconceptions which he, however innocently, had been the means of raising. The only parties now appearing in a criminal light who remain in the field, are the parents who forced a girl to give her hand where she had stated that her affections could not be given .- Bombay Times, March 3.

LORD GOUGH'S ESCAPE.—We believe most of our readers are aware that Lord Gough very narrowly escaped being taken prisoner at the battle of Chillianwalla. A letter from an officer on his lordship's staff, an extract of which has been sent for our perusal, says: "The old chief and the whole of us were completely exposed to the Ghorchurrahs, who came within fifty yards of us, but in consequence of the jungle were not aware of the prize within their reach; and two guns happening to come up at the moment-God knows how or why the horsemen were driven back by the first discharge. Had not this providentially occurred, we should all have been gone coons, as nothing, I am sure, would have persuaded Lord Gough to budge an inch." The same letter gives a plece of amusing information regarding the treatment of the two lancers, who, it may be remembered, were taken prisoners by the Sikhs, and afterwards released. It is said, that after being kept for two days, and exceedingly well fed and entertained, the captives were brought before two young sirdars, who took their scarfs from their necks and had them twisted round the lancers' heads in the form of turbans. When this was accomplished, the chiefs burst into fits of laughter, and sent the prisoners into the British camp in a palkee. There is evidently no lack of humour in the Sikh composition. If Shere Singh's men be "devils for fighting," they are certainly very merry ones when grim-visaged war is allowed to smooth his wrinkled front for a while. We wonder what they would have done, if they had succeeded in capturing Lord Gough? Where do they get the champaign, with which they regale their prisoners ?- Telegraph.

THE HONOURABLE MR. REID.—By this day's steamer the Honourable Mr. Reid, late member of council, quits India for Europe, after a residence in the East of thirty-two years. Mr. Reid distinguished himself as a pupil at Addiscombe, where he was contemporary with our late governor, Sir George Clerk; and on his arrival in India speedily secured the confidence and favour of Government. Having gone through the various gradations of the division of the service to which he belonged, he was in 1837 appointed secretary to Government in the Revenue and Territorial departments, and in 1843, on the departure of Mr. Anderson, elevated to a place in council, of which he had some time before been appointed provisional member. On the retirement of Sir George Arthur to Europe in July 1846, Mr. Reid obtained by seniority the appointment of acting governor, which he retained till the arrival of Mr. Clerk in 1847. He has always borne the character of a man of good talents, sound sense, and great powers of application; and no one could have conducted more gracefully or on a more liberal scale the hospitalities of Government House. Upwards of a thousand pounds have been subscribed, chiefly by his Native friends, to provide for him a testimonial in evidence of the esteem in which he has been held amongst them .- Bombay Times, March 3.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHT has been exhibited in the Town Hall, and the success of the experiment was complete. The light was sustained for about half an hour, and exhibited no interruption or flickering; it was so intense that the eye at the distance of 100 feet could scarcely rest on it, and here print of moderate size might be read with perfect facility. Measuring its intensity by the method of shadows, it seemed as powerful as a thousand wax candles. Yet some disappointment was felt at the smallness of its volume,—the luminous part being apparently about the size of a rupee. The tendency of the spectators was to look in the direction of the light till the eye became almost dazzled, and was in this way incapable of appreciating the general illuminatory power it possessed. It was not till one's back was turned on the experimenter that this could be appreciated. The community are greatly indebted to Captain Inglefield for the trouble he has taken to obtain for us a sight of this very interesting experiment.

COLONEL OUTRAM. - There is a report current that the Court of Directors have sent out instructions to obtain a refund from Colonel Outram of the amount received by him as a sharer in the Scinde prize-money, and the greater part of which has-as our readers know-been conferred by the distinguished recipient on Sir H. Lawrence's Hill Asylum, and other charitable institu-The ground upon which the order is based is, we hear, that Colonel Outram held civil office as a political at the time of the war, and had therefore no right to participate in the booty seized by the military. We cannot vouch for the truth of the rumour: if correct, we have no doubt the colonel—who refused to pocket the money—would have been much better pleased had the honourable Court come to their decision on the subject before he had parted with the "blood-stained coin."—Telegraph.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

CORNET WILLIAM HENRY SCOTT, 3RD L C.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Feb. 24, 1849.—At an European General Court-Martial, assembled at Sholapore, on Friday, Feb. 16, 1849, and of which Lieut.-Col. A. T. Reid, C.B., 16th N.I. is president, Cornet W. H. Scott, 3rd L.C., was tried on the following charge, viz. :—

Cornet W. H. Scott, 3rd L. C., placed in arrest by me on the following charge, viz. :-

Charge. - For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, prejudicial to good order and military discipline, in the following instances, viz. :-

lst Instance. - For having, at camp, Sholapore, on the evening of the 23rd December, 1848, between the hours of seven and eight r.m., or thereabouts, whilst sitting at the public mess table of the 3rd L. C., and in the presence and hearing of several officers and servants there assembled, sent the following verbal reply to Lieut. and Adjt. Ashburner, who by my order had sent him an official communication, viz., "Tell the Sahib to go to hell," or words to that effect.

2nd Instance. - In having, on December 21, 1818, between the hours of one and two P.M., or thereabouts, in the presence of several officers of the regiment there assembled at the messroom after tiffin, when asked by Lieut. and Adjt. Ashburner whether he had made use of the language as stated in the first instance of the charge, then and there falsely and knowingly denied the same, by the subterfuge of asserting that the words were intended to apply to the bearer of the communication.

(Signed) E. WALTER, B. Major, Com. 3rd L. C. Camp, Sholapore, Dec. 26, 1848.

Upon which charge the Court came to the following decision. Finding - Guilty of both instances of the charge.

Sentence. - To be dismissed the Honourable Company's ser-

Recommendation of the Court.

The Court having performed a duty which they have considered themselves called upon to discharge, for the support and maintenance of discipline, are however induced, from some of the circumstances which have appeared in the course of the trial, as also from the youth of the prisoner, to beg respectfully to recommend him to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

ned) A. T. Reed. Lieut.-Col. and President. (Signed)

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.

Under a correct verdict, and by a fully merited sentence, Cornet Scott has been adjudged to be dismissed the Hon. Co.'s service, and to the intercession of his judges he is indebted for his restoration to the functions of his commission. I therefore hope and trust that the result of this trial will prove a full and salutary warning to this young officer, and have a beneficial effect upon his future conduct, impressed with the certainty that should he, after this warning, come under the award of a CourtMartial, the sentence, in justice to the army, will carried into effect to the fullest extent.

(Signed) WILLOUGHBY COTTON, Lieut.-Gen.,

Com.-in-Chief, Bombay Army.

Cornet W. H. Scott, of the 3rd regiment light cavalry, is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

LIEUT. EDWARD ALFRED GREEN, 21st N.I.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Feb. 15, 1849 .- At an European General Court-Martial, assembled at Deesa, on Monday, January 29, 1849, and of which Lieut.-col. Aplin, H.M.'s 86th regt. is President, Lieut. E. A. Green, 21st N.I. was tried on the following charge, viz. :-

Charge.-Lieut. E. A. Green, 21st N.I. placed in arrest, and brought to trial by order of the Commander-in-Chief, on the following charge :-

For highly unofficer-like conduct while in command of a detachment of his regiment at Porebunder, in the following instances, viz. :-

let Instance.—In having, on or about August 12, 1848, on occasion of an outbreak of three Makranee prisoners under his charge, who had ejected the sentry, and taken possession of the guard-room in which they were confined, failed to adopt effective measures for immediately forcing the door and replacing them under the guard.

2nd Instance.—For having, on the same date, brought discredit upon the troops under his command, by having ordered bales of cotton to be placed for the purpose of screening his men from the fire of the three prisoners posted behind a feeble door, having no lock or other fastenings on the inside, and in having applied to the Rana of Porebunder for ordnance and men, and use of the same to break down the door.

3rd Instance.—In having, on the same evening, and while the prisoners were still in a state of resistance, left the place and returned to his quarters; without giving any specific instructions in respect to the further measures to be adopted for recovering pos-

4th Instance. In having, on the following morning, when it was reported to him that one of the prisoners had already come out of the guard-room, and that the other two were about to follow, quitted the detachment, the whole of which was under arms, and returned to his quarters; and further, in having omitted to give any specific orders relative to disarming and securing the prisoners, in consequence of which, on Subedar Maun Missar seizing one of the prisoners, who refused to lay down his arms, the whole three were instantly destroyed, without any orders whatsoever, by the sepoys of the detachment.

Adjutant General's Office, Bombay, 7th Dec. 1848. Upon which charge the Court came to the following decision:-Finding.—The Court, on the evidence before it, is of opinion, that the prisoner, Lieut. E. A. Green, 21st N.I. is, with respect to the first instance of the charge, Not Guilty. With respect to the second instance of the charge. Not Guilty. With respect to the second instance of the charge, Not Guilty. With respect to the 3rd instance of the charge, Not Guilty. With respect to the fourth instance of the charge, Not Guilty. And does, therefore, most fully acquit him of all and every part of the charge preferred against him.

"Approved and Confirmed."
WILLOUGHBY COTTON, Lieut. Genl. (Signed)

Commander-in-Chief, Bombay Army. Lieut. E. A. Green, of the 21st N.I. is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

By order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, (Signed) H. HANCOCK, Lieut. col.

Adjutant General of the Army.

COMMERCIAL REPORT.

FRIDAYAFTERNOON, FIVE O'CLOCK, MARCH 2, 1849.—During the interval that has elapsed since the date of our last report, the supplies of manufactured goods have been limited, only one arrival having from Liverpool taken place, and our market for piece goods generally continues in an active and healthy state. In the absence of any favourable accounts from the seat of war, some articles of Import continue depressed and neglected, but upon the whole our market wears as satisfactory an appearance as we have yet witnessed. The coming fortoight will be one of little business, in consequence of the Hooli holidays, which commence next week: at their close we look for an active resumption of business.

CHINA.

Loss of the CLIPPER "OMEGA."—The following account of the loss of the Omega is derived from Mr. R. Thompson, the second officer. He speaks in the highest terms of the kindness experienced from the merchants at Canton, and for which both he and the gunner wish publicly to express their gratitude. Captain Anderson was extensively known in China, and his premature loss is universally regretted. The schooner Omega, Captain Anderson, sailed from Hong-Kong on the 21st instant, for the southern stations. About two o'clock on the morning of the 5th, she was off Breaker Point. It was then blowing a strong breeze, and very dark, so that the low shore ahead could not be seen. captain, who had been on deck about half an hour, had just given orders to put the vessel about when she struck. Every possible exertion was made to get her off, and the mainmast was cut away; but the wind forced her further on the beach, and she fell over to the sea, which broke over her, washing away the lee quarter boat. The skylights were immediately washed off and the cabins filled with water. The main hatches were soon after forced up, and the cargo began to wash out. After about two hours, the lashings of the long boat gave way, and it was carried off. The crew took refuge in the weather fore-rigging, all on board being then safe, and remained there until daylight. As soon as the wreck was visible, an immense number of Chinese collected upon the shore. A lascar attempted to swim ashore with a rope, but was obliged to relinquish it. On landing he was seised and stripped by the Chinese, but, getting away from them, he swam back to the vessel. At 12 o'clock, noon, they supposed it to be low water, and lowered the remaining quarter boat, which was somewhat injured. The captain, Rev. Mr. Pohlman, a passenger, first and second officers, and such part of the crew as could not swim, got into it, the rest being directed either to swim ashore, a distance of less than a quarter of a mile, or to remain till the boat returned for them. Unfortunately a rush was made for the boat, which immediately upset and sunk. All that could not swim, including the passenger and first officer, were drowned, and the rest swam ashore, where they were seized by the Chinese, and stripped naked before reaching the beach. Captain Anderson had advised them to strip before entering the boat, to be prepared to swim, if necessary. Unfortunately he retained his usual dress, which must have impeded him much in swimming. Before reaching the shore he recommended the second officer, who The was near him, to offer no resistance to the Chinese. latter was seized, and his head dragged under water, while the clothes were torn off him; but as he had partly stripped, he was not held long, and was able to get up and escape.

The captain was served in the same manner; but having on more clothes, before they were got off, he was drowned. After being stripped, no further notice was taken of them, the attention of the Chinese being attracted to the cargo, a large quantity of which was now floating about in all directions. Nine of them who first escaped hastened into the interior, being apprehensive of further violence. After walking about three hours, they came to a village, where the inhabitants supplied them with a few rags of clothing, and some sweet potatoes for food. They endeavoured to make the natives understand that they wished to go to Hong-Kong; but a guide who was sent with them conducted them to Kup-chee. A lascar, who understood a little Chinese, was taken before a mandarin, and examined. One mace was then given them to purchase some food, and a house was allowed them to sleep in. On the 6th they walked along the shore, and at night reached a fishing village, where the mandarin gave them food and a lodging for the night. In the morning they were again supplied with food, but could not obtain a boat to bring them to Hong-Kong. The mandarin, however, gave them a mace each, and sent a guide to conduct them to La-Hong, which they reached at midnight, and slept at some barracks. They were detained there on the 8th, but obtained food and some additional clothing. On the morning of the 9th other six of the crew joined them, and told them there were six more, who overtook them on the 10th. Three Chinese belonging to the crew joined them the same afternoon, and on the 11th one Malay came up, who had travelled all the way alone, and been kindly treated. There were now twenty-five in all, and after receiving a mace each they left La-Hong on the morning of the 12th, and reached Hae-hung about eight P.M. They could get no food that night, and were locked up in the jail, along with some criminals in irons, but were not otherwise ill-used. Next morning each received forty cash, and two soldiers accompanied them to Pin-sang, where they arrived at five P.M. on the 15th. They were much exhausted with this journey over a hilly country, the only food they got during the three days being what they could purchase with the forty cash. Here they could have hired a boat for thirty dollars to convey them to Hong-Kong; but the mandarin would not allow it, and told them they must go to Canton. A canal boat was provided for them, and, being supplied with thirty-two cash each, they travelled all night, and at nine next morning arrived at Kewei-sing. Here they received fifty cash, and at one P.M. proceeded by canal. At daylight of the 17th they were again taken to a mandarin, who supplied them with eighty cash each. Travelling all night, they arrived at Canton on the 19th about eleven They were detained about three hours on the river above the city, but in sight of the British flag at the factories, and then forwarded to the Consulate. - Hong-Kong Register, Jan. 23.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Capt. James Abbott, Bengal Artillery, has communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, a memoir, written in 1847, establishing the identity of the spot occupied by the Sikh army under Shere Singh, on the Jelum, with the battle-field of Alexander the Great and Porus, and the site of the town of Jelum with that of the old Bucephalia. He has traced the movements of Alexander and Porus with great minuteness, placing Alexander and Porus opposite each other at the Jelum, where Crateus was left with the standing camp when Alexander moved up the stream to effect that nocturnal passage which he dreaded making in the teeth of the powerful elephant brigade on the opposite bank. Alexander is then believed to have moved on to Bhoons, which answers to the description of a woody promontory on the western bank, opposite a woody island in the river. As it was the season of the monsoon, it was natural to expect that the swollen currents would carry the boats considerably down; but a very little drift would bring them to a channel that landed them on the easternmost island of the group, one of the largest. The historian records Alexander's mortification when, supposing the Hydaspes to be passed, he discovered he had but gained a second and larger island, around which, considering the force of the raging torrent, there could be little hope of towing the boats. From this island Capt. Abbott traced a ford, opposite to Sirwali, by which the Jelum can be safely crossed to the mainland. This he believes to be the ford through which the phalanx waded breast-deep and gained the eastern bank. From Jelum to Sirwali, Alexander, travelling along the chord of an arc, had to march about ten miles; Porus, marching along the arc itself, went about nineteen, being obliged further to make a considerable detour to avoid the quicksands of the Sookaytur. Allowing, therefore, for the difficulties against which Alexander had to contend on the one hand, and the unreadiness of an Indian army on the other for forced marches, Capt. Abbott thinks it probable that the battle-field was near the village of Pubral, "a plain of firm sand, stiffened with clay, bounded on the S.W. by the Hydaspes, and by a range of low hills and ravines on the N.E., the interval being about five miles." Capt. Abbott adds a number of collateral identifications to support his view of this battle. The Taxiles of the historian, he thinks, is without doubt the Tarkhaili clan, still inheriting a portion of their old possessions, viz. the mountain ridge of Gundghur, on the left bank of the Indus and about thirty miles shought. the Indus, and about thirty miles above Attock. He looks upon Khan-i-Zeman Khan as the lineal descendant of Oomphis (Taxiles was a family name), and is gratified with the idea of baving restored to this chief the hereditary possessions of his The Affacini are recognized to be the Eusafzaies, their wide plain spreading at the foot of the isolated Moha Bunn, a mountain 5,000 feet above the Indus, which washes its base, and is identified by Capt. Abbott with the long-sought Aornos. On the crest of this mountain there was formerly a fort, "but its very name is lost, although traces of the walls remain, agreeing exactly with the site of Aornos." The Maha Bunn agrees to the minutest particular with the description of Aornos, "standing on the right bank of the Indus, feathered with forests, watered by perennial springs. Its summit, a plateau capable of holding the camp of a Persian army, and of employing a hundred planets its partners the support of innumerable cattle its ploughs; its pastures, the support of innumerable cattle; its forests and fastnesses, the refuge of the Affacini of the plains, and of fugitives from Ahisara and Taxila; its height, gigantic and pre-eminent; its position, sufficiently near to annoy Alexander's pre-eniment; its position, sumciently near to annoy Alexander's columns; its inhabitants, to this day unconquered, paying neither allegiance nor tribute to any man. Khubul, a large village washed by the waters of the Indus, is still a noted hotel for fugitives from Pesliawur and Hazara."

At a meeting of the Medical and Physical Society of Bombay, on the 3rd February, Dr. Giraud read a paper on poisoning with Datura, founded chiefly on the cases treated in the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital. He commenced by stating that many species of the genus Datura are indigenous throughout India, and that the intoxicating properties of these plants have been known by eastern nations from time immemorial, the botanic name of the genus having been adopted from the Sanscrit Dhatoora. Consequent upon a knowledge of their intoxicating properties, they have long been employed in India, China, and the islands of the Eastern Archipelago, to facilitate the commission of theft, and other crimes. Alluding to the frequency of poisoning with Datura in Bombay, which he stated to be so great, that the natives are able to recognise the cases at once, by their characteristic symptoms, he inquired into the motives which prompt to the administration of the poison, which would seem to be extremely various. The remarkable circumstance, that although so frequently administered it so rarely proves fatal, was then brought under notice, and a reference on this point was made to the cases treated in the Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy Hospital during the last year. Dr. Giraud then remarked upon the almost impossibility of obtaining positive information of the administration of the drug, owing to the stealthy manner in which it is administered, and to the disinclination so generally evinced by natives to aid in effecting the ends of justice. From all the information he had been able to obtain, it would appear that the seeds, powdered and thrown into rice, or mixed with sweatmeats, are most frequently given; but occasionallg a decoction of the leaves is introduced into the vessels in which food is being prepared.

One of the most singular uses to which chloroform has been turned is as a source of motive-power to machinery; in other words, to drive steam-engines. In Wolf's steam-engine, steam at a high pressure operates on one piston in a separate cylinder, and having performed so much duty here, passes off to another, where it is made use of by the ordinary methods of condensation. This is a case precisely analogous to that of the chloroform-engine, which is provided with two cylinders, one working by steam, as usual, which passes off and is condensed by chloroform, which being thus heated and raised into vapour, acts as steam in a second cylinder, from which it is itself condensed by cold, and restored to its original form. The saving of fuel thus effected is said to amount to some fifty per cent.; and, as the water of the condensed steam never mixes with the chloroform, it can be restored to the boiler, which even at sea may thus always be fed with pure fresh water, yielding neither crust nor deposit.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, April 3, 1849.

Public interest has been so much engrossed by the operations on the Chenab and Jelum, that the assault of the city and surrender of the fort of Mooltan have attracted less notice than the events deserve. The official reports of the latter, recently published, furnish not only more authentic, but more distinct, narratives than the private communications, and add some further particulars.

The assault of the city, as already known, was made by two columns,—one of Bengal troops, under Brigadier Markham; the other of Bombay troops, under Brigadier Stalker. Both columns moved simultaneously from the point of rendezvous, the Mundee Awa, about 2 P.M. on the 2nd January.

The Bengal attacking column was intended to enter a supposed breach at the Delhi gate; but the storming party, formed of H.M.'s 32nd, having passed the broken ground and ruined outworks of the gate, and descended a deephollow, came upon the city wall, about thirty feet high, unbreached and totally impracticable. They prudently retired and rejoined their column, which took ground to the left, and entered the breach at the Khoonee Boorj, already carried by the Bombay troops; thence making their way to the right, encountering considerable opposition from the enemy in the narrow streets and on the ramparts (some of the former being barricaded), as far as the Delhi gate.

The Bombay column of attack moved to the breach at the angle of the Khoonee Boorj, a discharge of grape being skilfully thrown by Lieut. Keir, of the Bombay artillery, on the top of the breach, just over the heads of the troops as they advanced. When the storming party, formed from the 1st Bombay fusiliers, reached the summit of the breach, they found themselves in a sort of enclosure, whence the only exit was by a narrow lane, and perceived that the enemy had excavated a deep trench, parallel to the breach-

These obstacles detained them for nearly twenty minutes. Meanwhile, Colour-Sergeant John Bennett, of the 1st fusiliers, who had volunteered to accompany the storming party, and planted the union jack on the crest of the breach, stood beside it until the whole column had passed, the colour and staff being riddled with balls.

The impediments being overcome, the whole column, dividing into three, pushed down the lane, and through the town, scattered into irregular parties by the narrowness of the streets, their only guide being the retreating enemy. The ramparts were incomplete, or so intersected by traverses and trenches, that a passage round them was impracticable.

The town was in possession of the troops by sunset; but night closed before communications could be established between the different bodies. During the night, one of the enemy's powder-magazines blew up, destroying several of our men. Their ammunition, Brigadier Stalker states, was lying about in great quantities, and there was nothing to distinguish their magazines from other houses. The Bengal sappers removed a considerable quantity of powder from another magazine close to a burning house, and threw it over a wall, where it exploded without mischief.

The troops earned a high praise by their forbearance. "Their conduct throughout," says General Whish, "was remarkable for humanity to the unarmed inhabitants they occasionally met;" and Brigadier Stalker bears the same testimony to their "humanity and forbearance."

Whilst the assault of the city was going on, the allies were making a diversion on the south and west. Lieut. Lake threw out a large skirmishing party in his front; General Cortlandt another on Lake's left, and Major Edwardes a third on the left of Cortlandt's, besides moving ont a strong body of cavalry, with artillery, in front of the village of Darra. After the city was taken, Edwardes's patrols intercepted a party of the enemy's infantry attempting to escape.

General Whish records a spirited proposition made by Lieut.-Col. Franks the previous day, to escalade the citadel during the assault of the city, which, the general says, "after due consideration, I deemed it most eligible to forego."

Of the subsequent bombardment of the citadel, there are few official reports; one of them, however, from Commander Powell, of the Indian navy, commanding the Indus flotilla (which seems to have rendered excellent service), notices the destruction of one of our batteries, manned by flotillamen, mounting seven 18-pounders, the fascines of which the lower part was formed having taken fire by the bursting of one of the enemy's shells.

It appears that several communications had been made by Moolraj to General Whish, proposing terms; but the general persevered in insisting upon an unconditional surrender. The assault of the citadel was intended to have taken place at daylight on the 21st January; but the counterscarp on the city side not having been blown in, as calculated upon, the attack was deferred until the next day. In the forenoon of the 21st, the vakeel of Moolraj came with a letter from him, asking only assurance of his life and that the females of his family should not be disgraced. The general's reply was, that the dewan must submit unconditionally "to the justice of the British Government;" and that no stipulation was necessary regarding women and children, who of course would not be molested. The vakeel then said his master would certainly come in next day; and accordingly, on the 22nd January, he appeared in the British camp, the garrison, between 3,000 and 4,000 men, at the same time, laying down their arms, and surrendering to the columns under Brigadiers Hervey and Capon, in orders for the assault of the citadel.

Major-General Whish has been blamed for excess of caution; events have shown that he formed a correct estimate of the enemy he had to deal with, and that his caution was dictated by prudence and judgment.

THE Home Government has at length given way, upon the subject of the Indian railways, to an extent which appears to have exceeded the hopes of the most sanguine. The terms and conditions (which will be found in another column) embrace the following points: the selection of the line to be left to the Government of India, and the construction of the railway to be under the supervision and direction of the officers of the East-India Company, the Government providing the land, which is to be leased to the Railway Company for ninety-nine years, terminable, in certain events, at a shorter period; the capital raised by the Railway Company to be paid into the East-India Company's treasury in London, and to hear an interest of five per cent., which is to be repaid out of the profits of the undertaking; and if they exceed five per cent., one-half of the excess is to go towards repaying the interest advanced in former years, and the other half to the shareholders, who are to have all the extra profit when the whole arrears of interest shall have been repaid. The Railway Company are to run such trains as shall be deemed necessary by the Government in India, whose officers are to have a perfect supervision of the working of the line. Any loss sustained in working the line is to be borne by the Railway Company, who, however, will be at liberty to give it up to the East-India Company after six months' notice, receiving payment of the original capital invested. A company undertaking such a work must lodge with the East-India Company a subscription list for the whole amount of the capital, with a deposit of six per cent., and the East-India Company will take measures to obtain charters for the Railway Company, in which a clause is to be introduced binding the Railway Company to the payment of the required capital, and the completion of the works within a certain period; and the Government of India are to have the option of purchasing the railway at the expiration of twentyfive or fifty years, at the mean market value of the shares during the three preceding years. The present arrangement is in no respect to supersede the terms in the Legislative letter of the Indian Government of May 7th, 1845,* with the exception of the guarantee of interest; and the Railway Company is to carry the mail free, and troops and stores at the lowest rates charged for passengers and goods.

These terms, according to the Times, are "such as will give full satisfaction to all the parties;" they will, therefore, put an end to a very disagreeable state of things, which threatened to suspend, if not prevent, these useful undertakings. However unreasonable were the demands, it was wise on the part of the Government to make this concession, and the precautions taken will provide an effectual security against negligence, waste, and all the evils attendant upon the self-management of railway concerns.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sin,—In the Morning Chronicle of this date, under the head "Cavalry Brigade at Chillianwallah," you will find that the 5th regt. Bengal Light Cavalry formed part of Brigadier White's brigade, and that the 1st and 6th Light Cavalry, her Majesty's 9th Lancers, with the 14th Dragoons, were the regts. under Brigadier Pope. I have seen several letters from Lord Gough's camp, in which there is not even the whisper of a suspicion against the 5th Cavalry; I feel, therefore, satisfied that you will, in justice to this gallant regiment, give insertion to this letter in your next Indian Mail.

I have the honour to remain, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

AN OFFICER FORMERLY ATTACHED TO THE 5TH CAVALRY. 26th March, 1849.

• * The misbehaviour of this fine regiment was noticed by us on the authority of very distinct statements both in the Bombay Times and the Bombay Telegroph (see Mail, pp. 133 and 136), of which we have yet seen no contradiction in any Indian paper. - Ep.

THE INDIAN RAILWAYS.

The following are the terms and conditions upon which assistance will be afforded by the East-India Company for the construction of a line of railway in the Bengal presidency:—

"1. That the selection of the line of railway be left to the Government of India, it being understood that the section to be undertaken, in the first instance, shall be the commencement of the line which may be determined upon from Calcutta towards the upper provinces, so as to form a commencement of the line leading either to Mirzapore or to Rajmahal.

"2. That the railway be made by a company under the supervision and direction of the East-India Company, whose officers in India or in London shall attend to the whole expenditure, and see that the capital account is properly kept in the course of construction.

"3. That a capital of £1,000,000 sterling, for the execution of the proposed experimental section, shall be raised by the railway company from the shareholders, and paid into the East-India Company's treasury in London, to be redrawn as required for expenditure for such purposes only as shall be admitted to be capital.

4. That the land be provided by the Government.

" 5. That the land remain the property of Government, and that the railway company be granted the use of it on lease for 99 years; but which, nevertheless, shall be terminable at any shorter period, when the East-India Company shall, under the conditions and stipulations herein contained, become possessed of the railway.

6. That the East-India Company shall pay annually to the directors of the railway company a sum equal to 5 per cent, interest on the capital of one million paid into the East-India Company's treasury, under the provision contained in clause 3.

"7. That the whole of the profits shall be applicable to repay the East-India Company the interest of 5 per cent. thus advanced; and if more profit than 5 per cent. is made, then that onehalf of the surplus shall go towards repaying the interest advanced in former years, and the other half to the shareholders. the arrears of interest, with interest thereon, calculated at the rate of 5 per cent. from the time it shall have been advanced by the East-India Company, are all paid, then all the extra profit to go to the shareholders.

"8. That in order that the public may have security that the railway, when opened, shall be kept in use, it be a condition that the railway company shall run such trains as the Government in India shall consider necessary for the convenience of the public and the general traffic.

"9. That, in the working of the line, the East-India Company shall have perfect supervision of works, books, accounts, &c., and shall see that the line and working-stock are at all times kept in perfect repair, equal to the first state; and that if the railway company fail to follow the directions of the East-India Company's officers, the latter shall be at liberty to make repairs, and deduct the cost from the next accruing interest, or other moneys, to be paid to the railway company.

"10. That in no case shall the East-India Company be called upon to pay more than 5 per cent. per annum on the capital paid into the Company's treasury, to an extent not exceeding £1,000,000 sterling; and that if there be any loss in working the line, the railway company shall bear the same so long as they They shall, however, be at liberty to give it up to the East-India Company at any time they please after six months' notice in writing, which may be given at any time after the line first to be made shall have been finished and in operation for the space of three months, but the railroad to be given up in perfect condition, both as to the line and the working-stock. They shall then receive payment of the original capital invested in the actual survey and construction of the line, either in one sum, or, at the option of Government, it may be commuted for an annuity, according to the provision hereinafter contained for the purchase of the railway by the East-India Company, the railway company having satisfied the East-India Company that all claims against the railway company, in respect to the railway, have been dis-

"11. That any company undertaking these works shall lodge with the East-India Company, within two months from the date of the Court's letter transmitting the present revised terms, a subscription contract list of the shareholders, to be approved by the East-India Company, for the whole amount of the capital required,—namely, £1,000,000 sterling, with a deposit thereon of 6 per cent.; whereupon the East-India Company will return the present deposit of £60,000, and will take measures in view to obtain without delay for the railway company a charter from the Government of India, and a charter in conformity therewith from the Crown.

"12. That a clause be introduced into such charters which shall bind the railway company to the payment of the required capital, and the completion of the works undertaken within such period as may be agreed upon between them and the East-India Company, and which, in case of failure of such engagement, shall enable the East-India Company to take possession of the line upon the repayment only of the cost of survey and construction of such portions of the line as shall have been actually completed and opened to the public.

"13. That provision be made for securing to the Government of India the option of purchasing the railway at the expiration of 25 or of 50 years.

" 14. That the terms of such purchase shall be computed at the mean market value of the shares of the railway during the three years last preceding the said period of 25 or 50 years, as the case may be.

"15. That the purchase-money so computed may, at the option of Government, either be paid to the railway company in one sum, or be commuted for a fixed annuity for the remainder of the lease of 99 years.

"16. That it is to be understood that the annual payment guaranteed by Clause 6 of these terms and conditions will be confined to the experiment now under consideration.

"17. That it is to be likewise understood that the present arrangement in no respect supersedes the terms communicated to the Government of India in the legislative letter of May 7, 1845, with the exception only of the question of guarantee of interest.

" 18. That, in consideration of the rate of interest having been raised from 4 to 5 per cent. per annum, the railway company undertakes to carry the mail free, and the troops, the artizans, and the stores of the Government, at the terms chargeable for the lowest class of passengers, and at the lowest rate for goods respectively."

The terms and conditions granted to the Bombay line (the Great Indian Peninsula) are similar to the above, a capital of £500,000 being allowed for the section from Bombay to Callian, with a further £500,000 should the Government engineer report in favour of the extension of the undertaking.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

House of Commons, March 22.

Capture of Mooltan .- Mr. Hindley inquired whether any question had arisen respecting prize-money to the captors of Mooltan? whether it had been correctly represented that the amount of plunder permitted at the siege of Mooltan was fearful, and the work of spoliation by no means confined to the private soldiers? also, who were the parties responsible, and what steps would the Government take to bring the perpetrators to justice?

Sir J. C. Hobhouse replied, that, with respect to the Mooltan prize-money, a question had arisen whether the General Commanding-in-Chief with the main army was estitled to a share.

That question had been referred by the Governor-General to the home authorities, who would decide it in accordance with theordinary rules. With respect to the other point, he (Sir J. C. Hobhouse) had gone through the whole despatches with respect to the taking of Mooltan, and particularly those transactions which had been so misrepresented. (Cheers.) Unless there were facts which did not appear, or which were not even hinted at, in those despatches, those rumours were totally unfounded. (Loud cheers.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER. — The new Commander-in-Chief in India, Lieutenant-General Sir Charles James Napier, took his departure on the 24th March. He was occupied the whole of the previous day in taking leave of Lord John Russell and the principal members of the Government, and paying farewell visits to his numerous friends in the metropolis. On the afternoon of the 24th he had a protracted interview with the Duke of Wellington, at the conclusion of which he took leave of the illustrious Duke. Sir James Lushington, Viscount Hardinge, Sir Robert Peel, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Ellenborough, and a host of personal friends, called at the General's residence in Upper Berkeley Street, to make complimentary visits prior to his leaving England. Sir Charles, accompanied by Lady Napier and Mrs. M'Murdo (his daughter), and by Lieut. Col. George Napier, Major W. M. G. M'Murdo, Capt. Bunbury, and Capt. Pitt Kennedy, and suite, left Upper Berkeley Street, at eight o'clock, for the South-Eastern Railway, and proceeded by the mail train to Dover, where he was to take farewell of Lady Napier and daughter, and proceed by the mail packet to Calais, whence Sir Charles and the members of his staff repair by the shortest route to Nice, to see his brother, General Sir George Napier, and to sojourn there only a few hours. One of her Majesty's steamers stationed with the squadron in the Mediterranean will then convey Sir Charles and suite to Alexandria.

THE STANDARD CAPTURED AT CHILLIANWALLAH proves to be the banner taken from the Mahrattas by the 56th N. I. at the battle of Maharajpoor, and subsequently borne by that regiment in addition to their own two colours. It fell into the hands of the Sikhs during the terrific conflict on the 13th of January, and was retaken by the grenadiers of the 70th Bengal N.I., in the splendid charge made, rear in front, by Col. Godby's brigade, in which nine guns were taken, and those of Christie's troop re-covered. This standard, which is of yellow silk, with a red cross, and bearing in the upper quarter a naked dagger, without a hilt, of red silk also, was returned by the 70th regiment to their gallant brethren in arms.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Queen of England, Mary Nile, Madagascar, Duke of Argyll, and Baron of Renfrew, have been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta; the Nile for conveyance of stores to Calcutta; Seringapatam for ditto to Madras, and the Ferozepore for ditto to Bombay.

Letters from Aden mention a singularly striking manifestation of luminousness on the sea, observed by the passengers by the Moozuffer, on the 23rd January last, when about half-way between Bombay and Aden. The surface of the water at once became smooth and glassy, as if oil had been poured on it, and was overspread with a sheet of pale greenish light, as far as the eye could reach.

The steamer lost speed, and masses of sea-weed were seen floating in all directions around. The thin clouds on the horizon reflected back the light, presenting an appearance similar to that witnessed in northern latitudes when the Aurora fills the air.

PUNKAHS IN CHURCHES.—" Were our preachers one whit less energetic and impressive than they are," says an Indian paper, "the monotonous swing-swing-swing would at any season run the risk of setting their congregations asleep, or depriving them of congregations altogether. In the cold dry December winds, each puff-puff puff comes down like a jet of cold water on the head of the sufferer."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

The Auchland Islands: a Short Account of their Climate, Soil, and Productions; and the Advantages of establishing there & Settlement at Port Ross, for carrying on the Southern Whale Fisheries. By Charles Enderey, Esq., F.R.S. Richard-

This description of the Auckland group of islands (situated about 180 miles from New Zealand), which were discovered in 1806, and taken possession of on behalf of the Crown, is published by Mr. Enderby, the public-spirited projector of a colony there, with the immediate view of reviving that important branch of British industry, the southern whale-fishery, for which purpose a company has been recently formed and incorporated.
The islands, laving been granted by her Majesty's Government to Mr. Enderby and his brothers, in furtherance of this project, have been placed by them at the Company's entire disposal; and as a pledge of the bona fides of his intentions, Mr. Charles Enderby has determined to proceed thither himself, to superintend in person the business of the fishery, and to reside there until every department in the colony shall be fully and efficiently organized. He has the support of the Government, who have promised that a vessel of war shall visit the islands every month; and there is every prospect that the advantages which these islands, placed in a mild and salubrious climate, hold out to settlers, will be fully realized.

Ma. Gonz has shown, in this pamphlet, the unprovoked aggression of the Sikh Government prior to the treaty of 1846; the policy of upholding the superiority of our arms, and teaching the nations of the East "that no people can with impunity break faith with us;" the greater advantage of having the Indus than the Sutlej for our frontier; the blessings which our rule would diffuse throughout the Punjab, and that "there are in that country sources of yet undeveloped wealth, which, under a wise administration, will tend to augment the power and greatness" of England; and he thence appears to deduce the conclusion that we should annex the Punjab to our dominions. But all these matters needed no demonstration; they are either admitted or self-evident; what required proof was that, having concluded a treaty with the young Maharaja of the Sikhs, acknowledging his title to the Lahore territories; having since entered into another treaty by which we guaranteed to him our protection, we are justified in seizing upon his possessions; and of this, the only point upon which there is any doubt, Mr. Gore has not said one word. He admits that our authority in the has not said one word. He admits that our authority in the East rests on opinion—that is, the conviction of our justice; if so, the question becomes one not of principle alone, but of policy. The doctrine of geographical boundaries, when adopted by Napoleon and the Congress of Vienna, was stigmatized as tyranny and usurpation; the same doctrine adopted in India cannot be more just, and if not just, it cannot be safe.

• a** This work was undertaken in order to meet the exigency of our day—vis. a copious and portable Hindustani Dictionary at a moderate cost. It has been the compiler's aim to accomplish this object, not by the omission or abridgment of any words and phrases, but by the adoption of a small, distinct, and economical type, whereby he is enabled to lay before the public, in one volume royal octavo, of about 1,000 pages, the most complete Hindustani Dictionary yet offered for sale. The First Part—Hindustani and English—contains more words (by some thousands) than have ever been previously collected in one work by former compilers. The Second Part—English and Hindustani—is also by far the most copious of the kind that has yet appeared. The author having devoted the greater portion of his life to the study of the Oriental languages, and upwards of twenty years to instructing others therein, has had every advantage in the compilation of this laborious book, which he trusts will not be deemed unworthy of extensive patronage.
